That we advise that an answer to the following effect be sent to Mr. Noonan: That Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake to promise that they will accord to Mr. Noonan any exceptional protection as a British subject in that particular country of which he has voluntarily become a citizen, so making himself, while within the territory of that country, liable to all the effects and consequences of citizenship within its jurisdiction; and that the principle which they thus apply to his case is the same on which Her Majesty's Government invariably act in all similar cases.

a printed copy of an opinion delivered by Judge Daly with regard to the seizure of cotton at Savannah by the United States' authorities; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion of Judge Daly, that the particular case of Messrs. Bernheimer presents strong claims to the equitable consideration of the United States' Government, and that it may be reasonably expected that this Government will restore the captured cotton to its owners.

With respect to the general principles of international law applicable to the subject, we are of opinion that property captured in an enemy's town is primâ facie enemy's property, but that on proof of neutral ownership it ought to be restored by the Government of the captors to the owners. This obligation, to the fulfilment of which the neutral owner has a right, is not dependent on the question as to the particular channel or form through which restitution is made. It may be either through the medium of a regular Court, or through a commission issued by the Government, or directly by the Executive itself.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we can form any opinion from the meagre report of this important trial contained in the extract of the newspaper which is submitted to us, we are of opinion that the Judge rightly laid down the law to the jury; and we see no reason to doubt that the verdict which, after ten hours' consideration, the jury found, was under the circumstances right and proper.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 301, May 19, 1865), and its inclosure, together with a letter dated the 13th ultimo from the Hudson's Bay Company, respecting a question which has been raised as to the right of navigation on the Columbian River; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. Copies of the Treaties bearing upon this subject, as well as certain correspondence which has passed regarding it, were also inclosed for reference, if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the fact that the specific powers of the Commissioners are limited to the decision of claims arising only out of the IIIrd and IVth Articles of the Treaty of Oregon; looking to the correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and Her Majesty's Representative at Washington (referred to in the despatch of Mr. Rose), contemporaneous with the making of that Treaty, and especially the letter from the Foreign Office to Mr. Pakenham, June 29, 1846, in Volume 1 of the volumes submitted to us; and also to the fact that by the language of the IInd Article of the Treaty of Oregon the Columbia is opened to "all British subjects" trading with the Hudson's Bay Company,—we are of opinion that the Commissioners ought not to consider the right to navigate the Columbia as an item of property belonging to the Company which is to be made the subject of specific and separate valuation; though they will, of course, be at liberty to take into consideration, among the other elements which give value to the territory which the Company is about to abandon, the advantages which all or any part of that territory may possess in the hands of the Company as situated upon a great river, navigable, as of right, by the Company, and by British subjects trading with them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the letter of Mr. Seward (dated June 16, 1865) to Sir F. Bruce replaces the agreement as to the limitation of the naval forces to be employed by the Government of Her Majesty and the United States in the waters of the North American Lakes upon its original basis; that the notice of the abrogation of that agreement is entirely cancelled; and that no further diplomatic measures as to this matter are necessary, beyond such an acknowledgment of Mr. Seward's reply as will place on record the understanding of Her Majesty's Government that the notice is absolutely withdrawn, and that the Convention of 1817 will continue in force, unless it should be hereafter terminated by a new six months' notice to be given by either of the parties thereto.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 18th of March, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 5th instant, and its inclosures, respecting the case of the "Mary" or "Alexandra;" and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 12th instant, inclosing further papers relative to the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Attorney-General may have exercised a sound discretion (having regard to all the circumstances) in declining to appeal from the sentence of the Judge in this case; but we desire not to be understood as expressing our agreement either with the general reasoning of the Judgment, or with the construction placed by it on the word "intent" in the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We do not clearly collect from the papers whether the Judge has or has not certified that there was in this case reasonable cause for seizure: but we assume, from his refusing costs to the claimants, that he would be prepared so to certify; and we think it desirable that he should do so, in order to protect the Crown in the event of any action being brought for damages on account of the seizure.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to add that your Lordship presumes that the case is one which should be left to the decision of the Prize Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be expedient, before determining whether any representation should be made to the United States' Government in this case, that a communication should be made to Mr. Laird in order to ascertain whether he does or does not claim the "Wren," of which he is the alleged owner, as his property.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 17th ultimo, and its inclosures, respecting a supposed Confederate prize schooner, the "St. Mary's," which had put into the port of Kingston, Jamaica, to obtain supplies; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether this vessel should have been detained, and with any other observations we may have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we presume the visit of the ship in question to Jamaica occurred before Her Majesty's orders, consequent upon the cessation of the war between the United States and the Confederate States, were or could be known in that Colony.

Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind the previous revocation of the Rules of January 1862 (except the twenty-four hours' rule), we are not prepared to say that any blame can be thrown upon Governor Eyre for the hospitality which he extended to this vessel under circumstances of distress; although the course previously pursued with respect to the same vessel in the Bahamas (as to which see our Report of the 2nd June last) was, in our judgment, improper, whether the character which she then assumed was that of a Confederate ship of war or of a prize only. All future cases of this kind (if any such should occur) will of course be governed by the orders recently issued by your Lordship.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 12, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 11th of August, 1864, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter from Mr. J. B. Lafitte, dated the 21st ultimo, respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Lafitte's letter appears to us to call for no notice beyond a simple acknowledgment, and a statement that Her Majesty's Government, being satisfied with the manner in which their representations upon this subject have been met by the Government of the United States, wholly decline to recognize the existence of any claim against this country on the part of the owner of the "Margaret and Jessie," or to carry on any further correspondence upon the subject.

While we consider this answer sufficient for Mr. Lafitte, we think it expedient to observe that he seems to forget, or at least omits to state, that the "Margaret and Jessie" was an enemy's vessel, chased by and flying from a pursuing vessel. Shots would, of course, be fired at her till the last moment of her entering the territorial waters of a neutral. We thought, and we continue to think, that no shot was intentionally, if at all, fired at the "Margaret and Jessie" after she was within three miles of the shore. We do not find in these papers any answer from the United States' Government as to the complaint of Her Majesty's Government that shots were fired from the United States' vessel from guns carrying five miles, which reached the shore and endangered the lives and property of Her Majesty's subjects. We venture to suggest that the return of peace offers an opportunity for communications with foreign Governments, having for their object either to extend the distance of three miles from the shores as the limit of territorial rights, which became a part of the customary law of nations when cannon-shots did not reach beyond that distance, or at least to establish a general rule against the firing of shot or shell in any naval action so near to any neutral territory or waters as to be capable of falling and doing damage within such territory or waters.

Lincoln's Inn, August 15, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Messrs. Aitken, Rodger, and Co., dated the 27th ultimo, respecting a claim preferred by them upon the United States' Government on account of certain bales of cotton belonging to them having been destroyed by General Sherman's army; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the extract of the letter of Messrs. Aitken, Rodger, and Co.'s correspondent that their cotton "shared the fate of all that fell into his (General Sherman's) hands;" that is, it was destroyed by him, in common with all the property which he met with in his march through the enemy's country. In causing this destruction General Sherman exercised the right—though the very extreme right—of a belligerent. His object was so to weaken the enemy by the destruction of private as well as public property, and especially of cotton as a main aliment of the defence, as to put an end to the war; and this end he accomplished.

The question arises whether in this march through the interior of an enemy's country, he was bound to distinguish and respect this particular property, consisting of bales of cotton belonging to a neutral; or whether the neutral was not, so far as such property was concerned, in the same condition as the innocent native, passive and not active in the war, subject to the same risks, and protected by the same remedies, if any?

Clearly this would be so if the cotton had been destroyed in a town taken by siege.

Is there, then, any difference in principle if the case be that the cotton which has been destroyed lay in the path of the advancing belligerent?

We think that there is no such difference; unless, at all events, it can be shown that property known at the time to belong to a neutral, and the destruction of which was not rendered imperatively necessary by any military exigency, was wantonly destroyed; the existence of which state of facts (so far as relates to knowledge of the neutral ownership of the property) is not so much as suggested in this case.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a note which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams in reply to his note of the 20th of May last, claiming compensation from Her Majesty's Government on account of injuries sustained by United States' commerce through the "Alabama" and other vessels, and to request that we would take this draft note into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have ventured in the accompanying copy of your Lordship's draft to suggest certain alterations (the reasons for which will be found explained in some marginal remarks by the Attorney-General, in which we are all to be understood as concurring).

Subject to these alterations and remarks, we think the proposed despatch is right and proper to be sent.

Lincoln's Inn, August 25, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter and its inclosure from Mr. Miller, the Secretary of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Guardian Society for the Protection of Trade, which has been forwarded to the Foreign Office by Mr. Daglish, the member for Glasgow, calling attention to the case of Jeremiah Townsend, who lately robbed a savings' bank at Newhaven, Connecticut, of upwards of 100,000 dollars, and who, after escaping to this country, has been forcibly taken back to the United States under circumstances which, it is stated, involve a total disregard of the existing Treaty of Extradition between the two countries; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the reports in the newspaper and the letter of Mr. Daglish be correct, there can be no doubt that Townsend was illegally taken back to America, and that the English policemen who aided in his capture and his abduction were guilty of a violation of the law.

Whether the Extradition Treaty with the United States of North America should be amended is a grave question, but at all events any such amendment must be founded upon an understanding previously established between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States.

As it is stated that a police officer was sent by the United States to this country, and that Townsend was taken back by that officer from Liverpool to the United States, we think it would be proper and expedient that the attention of the Government of the United States should be called to the circumstances of this case, in order that such instructions may be given to their police authorities as may prevent the possibility of the repetition of similar proceedings.

And we presume that the conduct of the Liverpool policemen who aided in these proceedings will be the subject of due animadversion.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 31.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 31, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 15th August instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 31st ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter from Mr. Laird, stating that the steamer "Wren" was built by Messrs. Laird Brothers, and registered in the name of Mr. John Laird, junior, a member of that firm, and by him transferred by bill of sale, on the 3rd of January, 1865, to Mr. C. K. Prioleau, of Liverpool; and to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that we should observe from the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Consul at New York (No. 60, July 26), that the "Wren" has been condemned at Key West.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason why Her Majesty's Government should interfere in this matter. The "Wren" is, doubtless, the same with a vessel of that name, which, in some recent proceedings in the English Court of Chancery (in which the Attorney-General acted as Counsel for the United States), was stated by Mr. Prioleau to have been built for the blockade-running service of the Confederate States, under arrangements between his firm and the Confederate Government, and it may therefore be assumed that she was not a bonâ fide British vessel.

While we think, for this reason, that the case does not call for any interference by Her Majesty's Government, we cannot but observe that, in this instance, the United States' authorities have resorted to and sanctioned a method of capture similar to that which they denounced as piracy against the Law of Nations, when practised by the Confederates in the case of the "Chesapeake" and the "Roanoke."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, in conformity with the suggestion of Mr. Secretary Cardwell, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this proposed circular into our consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion thereupon.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd of August ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 54), inclosing a statement of all complaints filed at that Consulate relative to property belonging to British subjects which had been seized or destroyed either at Charleston or in its vicinity by the United States' forces; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take the statement into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the statement submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we presume these claims will be all submitted to the Court of Claims established by the Legislature of the United States. It is important that the claimants should be apprized that they must rely mainly upon their own exertions in support of their claims before the Court.

We observe that the duration of residence in the United States varies from five to thirty-five years; and it is of course possible that different principles may be applied to the consideration of the recent comer and the long-established resident, if any distinction be made by the Court between the foreigner and the native subject.

Two points it will be expressly necessary for the claimants to establish: 1, that they took no part, directly or indirectly, in the civil war; 2, that it was not in their power to remove their property from the country after the war began.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th of August ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, and in case we should desire to offer any observations thereupon, a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 397, July 31), inclosing an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States of the operation of the Acts of Congress of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, with respect to "captured and abandoned property" handed over by the United States' forces to the Treasury Department.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add in a postscript to his letter, that we would observe from a subsequent despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 401, August 2), received since that letter was drawn up, that that opinion is accepted by the United States' Government as a guide in dealing with claims of this description.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused the papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That this despatch of Sir Frederick Bruce, with its inclosures, does not appear to us to call at present for any special observations. There seems to be reason to expect that the Court of Claims when established will do justice with respect to any British interests which may be brought before it.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 1st ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter, with its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, dated the 5th ultimo, respecting the proceedings of the Confederate schooner "St. Mary's;" and he was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, transmitting a letter from Mr. Adams, requesting an investigation of this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to call in question the propriety of the course pursued by Governor Eyre with respect to this vessel, as detailed in his despatch to the Colonial Office of the 6th July last, and the inclosures therein referred to.

So far, therefore, as relates to Mr. Adams' suggestion in his letter of the 10th of August, that there has been an "attempt further to abuse the neutrality of Her Majesty's territory after all pretence of an insurgent authority had disappeared in America," it does not appear to us that there are any circumstances in this case requiring further investigation by Her Majesty's Government.

With respect, however, to the allegation that the "St. Mary's" schooner remained, at the period referred to by Mr. Adams, "abandoned" by her captors in Annotto Bay, it will in our opinion be proper that inquiry should be made into the truth of that allegation. If, instead of complying with the peremptory orders given by Governor Eyre for her departure within twenty-four hours (as reported in his despatch of the 6th July) this ship was left derelict by her captors in Annotto Bay, we think it would have been right, under the particular circumstances of the case, that the Custom-house authorities there who appear to have exercised some sort of surveillance over her from the time of her arrival in that port (see Vice-Consul Camp's letters of 19th and 27th June), should have detained her with a view to her restitution to her true owners; and that if any conflicting claims of ownership had been made requiring investigation in a court of law, all possible aid and facility for the due investigation of these claims in the local Courts of Vice-Admiralty, or before some other competent tribunal, should have been afforded by the Colonial Government; or if it had appeared after allowing reasonable time for any such claims to be made that there was in fact no other claim than that preferred by the Vice-Consul of the United States, we think the vessel might (under the circumstances supposed) properly have been given up to the persons on whose behalf that claim was preferred, or to the Vice-Consul, or any other agent authorized by these persons to receive delivery of her on their behalf.

If it should now appear on inquiry that the vessel still remains within the jurisdiction of the Government of Jamaica, in circumstances which admit of either of these courses being properly and legally taken (as to which the Governor must necessarily have recourse to the advice of his own Law Officers), we think it will be proper to act accordingly. But it is clear (the war being ended) that any disputed question of title to this or to any other ship within any part of Her Majesty's dominions must be determined by the proper legal tribunals, in the ordinary course of law, and cannot be withdrawn from those tribunals by any summary exercise of power on the part of the Executive Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and with the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 241), relative to the case of the "Dashing Wave" and other vessels captured in the Rio Grande, in conformity with the advice tendered in our Report of the 12th of June, a despatch and its inclosures from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 410), stating the course he has pursued in this matter.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon; it appearing to your Lordship to be worthy of consideration whether Her Majesty's Government ought not to pay the costs of the appeal on behalf of those who defend the former decision.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we can only express our regret at the course which the United States' Government has thought proper to adopt in this case, and state that the opinion which we have had the honour to express in former Reports upon this subject remains unchanged.

We think that the circumstances of the case do render it proper that Her Majesty's Government should defray the costs of the appeal if they should not be awarded by the Supreme Court.

by the captain of the United States' corvette "St. Mary's," of a seaman who had deserted from his vessel; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 28th August, he was directed by your Lordship to inclose the despatch therein referred to (No. 408) respecting the disapproval of the United States' Government of the conduct of the captain of the United States' ship "St. Mary's."

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a further letter from the Admiralty, dated the 2nd instant, with its inclosures, respecting the deserter taken out of a British ship by the captain of the United States' ship "St. Mary's," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with those already before us, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the course which the United States' Government has taken in this matter seems to us perfectly satisfactory.

We agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Wells that the conduct of Commodore Colocoresses, though very reprehensible and properly reprehended, was not without palliation in the particular circumstances of the case. His offence appears to have been shared by Her Majesty's Consul, whose conduct, if it be correctly reported, appears to us worthy of severe censure.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Mobile (No. 9, July 22), respecting the claims of certain British subjects whose property was destroyed by an explosion of gunpowder in that city; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Mr. E. Jones and other claimants, whose property has been injured by this terrible accident, should be apprised that, though they must resort to the same remedies as subjects of the United States who are in a like predicament, and must rely mainly upon their own exertions for obtaining redress, Her Majesty's Government will instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to forward, as far as he properly can, any memorial on the subject which they may think fit to address to the United States' authorities. The considerations which would justify such a modified intervention on their behalf are—first, that the owners were neutral subjects of Great Britain; secondly, and principally, that the custody of their property was forcibly taken out of their hands by the United States' authorities, and placed by them in the position of jeopardy in which it was afterwards destroyed.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Hutton, dated the 7th instant, stating that, after a residence of sixteen years in the United States, and after taking the oath of allegiance to that Government, he has returned to England, and that he is desirous of resuming his position as a British subject; and that Mr. Hutton begs to be informed whether any steps are necessary on his part with a view to that object. And Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Hutton's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have the honour to advise that a letter should be written to Mr. Hutton to the following effect:—That his original allegiance to the Crown of England was indelible, and therefore that no legal steps are necessary to be taken in order to re-assume his position as a British subject in the dominions of Her Majesty; but that as he voluntarily enrolled himself among the citizens of the United States, if he should ever hereafter place himself within the territorial jurisdiction of the Government of the United States he must not rely upon the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to extricate him from any difficulties which his relation to the United States may lead him into.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of September instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, dated the 14th instant, inclosing the draft of an instruction which the Lords Commissioners propose to address to Rear-Admiral Denman, directing him to treat the "Shenandoah" as a pirate; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, by the laws of this country, the "Shenandoah" could be treated in a British Court as a pirate.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the fact that the "Shenandoah" belongs, if she be a vessel of war, to the United States, and, in that case, is sailing and acting without a commission from that Government, and, if she be a merchant-vessel, is engaged in the seizure and destruction of other merchant-vessels, though such vessels only at present appertain to the country of the United States; and to the fact that the "Shenandoah" has been apprized that the Confederate flag has for some time ceased to be recognized by all nations, we think it is lawful to instruct the Commanders of Her Majesty's ships to forcibly detain such vessel if she comes into port, and also forcibly to seize her upon the high seas if she be found equipped as a vessel of war, and sailing without the commission of any State de jure or de facto recognized by Her Majesty's Government.

We think that, primâ facie, such a vessel would be liable to be treated in a British Court as a pirate.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th of July respecting the claim of Mr. Molyneux, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 415, August 22), inclosing copies of his correspondence on the subject with the Acting British Consul at Savannah; and stating that, under the circumstances therein set forth, he has not felt justified in claiming the house in which Mr. Molyneux was living as an official residence, without submitting the point previously to your Lordship's consideration.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was therefore to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we now understand that the house of Mrs. Molyneux was a private house, and not one belonging officially to the Consul; at the same time, it contained the archives of the Consulate; there was no other Consular house; and, according to the previous statement, the British flag was hoisted over it, and pulled down by the United States' soldiers. It also appears that there was neither Consul nor Vice-Consul resident in Charleston at the time of its capture. Indeed, it is doubtful whether the office of British Consul at Charleston was at that time recognized by the de facto Government. It is, however, clear from the extract from the New York newspaper, that the United States' General was aware that the house had belonged to the British Consul, who was then in Europe.

We still think that the circumstances of this case sufficiently distinguish it from other cases in which the British subject must be considered, as far as his residence was concerned, as upon the same footing with an American, to render it expedient that Sir F. Bruce should bring them officially to the notice of the United States' Government.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence, as marked in the margin,* relative to a complaint made by the United States' Government, that the Government of Newfoundland had assisted some convicts to proceed from that Colony to the United States. That we should observe from the last letter of the series that an Act has been passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland, entitled "An Act to continue the punishment of banishment in certain cases;" and that with reference to the complaint above alluded to, Mr. Secretary Cardwell is anxious to learn your Lordship's opinion whether the Act may properly be submitted for the Queen's confirmation; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think this Act, in its present shape, is not proper to be submitted for confirmation to Her Majesty.

Whether, in any cases of the class formerly punished by transportation, a mere sentence of banishment from a particular part of Her Majesty's dominions would be a sufficient penalty for the due vindication of the law, seems to us questionable.

* Mr. Adams, October 31; to Colonial Office, November 3; Colonial Office, December 22; to Mr. Burnley, No. 580, 1864; Colonial Office, April 18; to Mr. Adams, April 24; Colonial Office, August 9, 1865.

But assuming that it might, in some cases, be expedient to arm the Courts of Newfoundland with power to pronounce such a sentence, and agreeing (as we do) with Mr. Cardwell that foreign Governments would have no just cause of complaint if persons so sentenced were simply left at liberty to go where they pleased, without the aid or intervention, in any shape, of the Colonial Government, we think the present Act objectionable, because it provides that such sentences shall be "carried into effect" by the Executive power of the Colony, without defining how that is to be done, and without introducing any securities for its being done, in such a manner as to avoid occasions of offence to foreign Governments. The Act does not even guard, by any penalties, against the voluntary continuance of a banished person in the Colony, except in the single case of his "return" thereto, after the sentence of banishment has been not only "pronounced," but "carried into effect." In order to render any such sentence effectual, and at the same time to avoid difficulties with other Powers, the Local Government ought, we think, to be authorized to cause any such banished persons to be forcibly deported to such places or place as Her Majesty, or the Governor (if so instructed by Her Majesty), may for that purpose direct and appoint. But no place ought to be appointed or authorized for such a purpose which is not either in Her Majesty's dominions, or in some country the Sovereign of which may be willing to consent thereto. It is further necessary to observe that no authority of this kind can be adequately conferred upon the Executive Government of Newfoundland, or any other Colony, without the concurrence of the Imperial Legislature, the coercive power of all persons acting under a merely Colonial Statute being of necessity limited to the Colony itself and its dependencies.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 27, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that, with reference to that part of our Report of the 12th ultimo respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie," in which it is suggested that the return of peace offers an opportunity for communications with foreign Governments having for their object either to extend the distance of three miles from the shore as the limit of territorial rights, or at least to establish a general rule against the firing of shot or shell in any naval action so near to any neutral territory or waters as to be capable of falling and doing damage within such territory or waters, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that before acting upon that suggestion, your Lordship thought it would be desirable that we should have an opportunity of further considering that question in connexion with a correspondence on the subject which passed between the Foreign Office and the Admiralty, the War Office, and Board of Trade,* shortly after our Reports of the 29th October and the 3rd November, 1864, were received; and Mr. Layard was accordingly to request that we would take this matter again into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such further observations as may occur to us upon a perusal of the inclosed correspondence, and if we should continue of opinion that it would be desirable to enter into negotiations with foreign Governments on the subject, he (Mr. Layard) was to request that would furnish your Lordship with our views as to the precise form which the proposals should take.

The previous papers were returned to us for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree generally with the views expressed in the Minutes of the Board of Trade and the Board of Admiralty upon this subject, except that we do not think it can be assumed as incontrovertible that any damage to life or property within neutral territory resulting from belligerent operations carried on (both as to the vessel attacking and as to the vessel attacked) beyond neutral limits, would, in the present state of international law, be wrongful.

* To Admiralty, War Office, and Board of Trade, November 9; Admiralty, November 18; War Office November 18; Board of Trade, November 18, 1864. Observations by the Cabinet.

It does, indeed, appear to us to be the better opinion, that a belligerent is absolutely bound to take care so to carry on his operations, wherever conducted, as to cause no such damage; but it might be contended, on the other hand (and we know no authority which can be referred to to decide the question), that if the act from which such damage accidentally results is done by a belligerent in the lawful exercise of his own rights against his enemy, and in a place where he is at liberty to carry on hostile operations without restraint, the case is one of damnum absque injuriâ, of which the neutral cannot strictly complain.

It appeared to us that the increased range of modern ordnance (a cause of permanent operation of which the influence must be expected to be felt in all future wars) had given to this question a greater degree of practical importance than it before possessed. We, therefore, ventured to suggest in our former Reports that this subject should be deliberately considered, with a view to arrive, if possible, at the general recognition, by all maritime Powers, of their absolute obligation in time of war so to conduct belligerent operations in the neighbourhood of neutral shores as to do no damage whatever to persons or property within neutral jurisdiction. And we continue to be of opinion that it would be for the general advantage of all nations that a clear common understanding to this effect should be arrived at and recognized as part of the established system of international law, although (in deference to the objections urged in the papers before us) we do not think it necessary now to press our former suggestions that an attempt should be made to define the precise distance from any neutral territory within which particular warlike operations may for the future be carried on. It is scarcely necessary to add that it has never been our intention to intimate an opinion favourable to the general extension of territorial sovereignty beyond the ordinary limit of three miles seaward; and we think that the reasons given by the Board of Trade are entirely conclusive against any such extension.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office, dated the 19th ultimo, respecting the proceedings of a vessel called the "Maria," which having violated the provisions of the Chinese Passengers Act of 1855, had quitted the port of Victoria, Vancouver Island, leaving all her papers behind her, and without a proper clearance; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That no blame attaches to the authorities of the United States in this matter. They are of course bound by the law; and as their legal advisers tell them that the vessel cannot be given up, they are powerless to do so, but I should have thought that the vessel might have been placed under the authority of Her Majesty's Consul resident at the American port into which the vessel came.

The suggestion that cases of this sort should be made by Treaty the subject of extradition appears to be worthy of consideration. Meanwhile this vessel without papers on the high seas is, as Governor Evans states, not a pirate but outlawed, and may be seized and taken into port by one of Her Majesty's ships.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of September ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 31st of July last he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, inclosing a copy of the Decree of condemnation in the case of the "Wren," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That looking to the various facts with relation to this vessel which were proved in the Prize Court of Florida, to the character of the person in command of the vessel, and to the general character and composition of the crew, to the papers which were found on board and the destruction of papers, and to the account given of those which were destroyed, to the absence of written instructions respecting the voyage, and to other circumstances, we are of opinion that the Prize Court was justified in holding the "Wren" to have been the property of a Confederate owner, and that, whether she was condemned as the ship of a belligerent taken during the war, or as a vessel belonging jure belli to the conqueror, after the war was over, no ground is laid for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the unsuccessful claimants of this vessel in the Prize Court.

It is satisfactory, however, to know, from the facts which lately transpired in the English Chancery suit between the United States and Messrs. Trenholm, Fraser, and Co., that the "Wren" did, in point of fact, belong to the Confederate Government; so that there is no occasion to examine the evidence before the Prize Court with any minuteness.

We think it right to invite your Lordship's attention to a passage (marked by us in the margin) in the printed Judgment of the Prize Court in this case, in which substantially the same doctrine is laid down, as to the succession of the United States by right of conquest to the public property of the late Confederate Government, with that on which Vice-Chancellor Wood intimated his disposition to act in the Chancery suit above mentioned, and to which doctrine exception is understood to have been since taken by the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the statement of Mr. Ernest Pratt himself, that he was (whether innocently, so far as previous knowledge and intention is concerned, or not) mixed up with a transaction which had for its object to carry on belligerent operations against the United States; for the "City of Richmond," of which he was the chief officer, carried out a belligerent crew (so we understand the statement as to the passengers) and munitions of war, for the purpose of transhipping them on board a steam-ram, which we presume was intended, at all events, not merely to be employed in running the blockade, but in carrying on active hostilities against the United States.

It seems to us that, in its origin, this enterprise was not that of a mere commercial speculation connected with blockade-running (to which the dicta of the late Lord Chancellor, cited by Mr. Pratt, would apply), but of the graver character which we have stated.

It is also, we think, to be collected from these papers that the "City of Richmond" was in reality not a British vessel, but was owned either by the Government or by citizens of the Confederate States. She was avowedly a blockade-runner (see Mr. Pratt Senior's original letter to your Lordship, April 4, 1865); and Mr. Ernest Pratt, while taking part as her chief officer in the warlike equipment of the "Stonewall," does not appear to have been under any physical compulsion, nor to have offered any objection or remonstrance, although, as he says, he had been engaged for a quite different service.

The Government of the United States could hardly be expected to accept, as an excuse from personal responsibility for the part taken by him in such a hostile act, the argument offered in his letter of the 18th April, to Sir F. Bruce (inclosed in his father's letter to the Foreign Office of 18th May): "I contend that it was too late to remonstrate on the subject, and that I, as chief officer, was compelled to obey the orders of my superior, the master of the ship." A similar excuse for any illegal act would not be admitted in any British Court of Law.

It is true that at Nassau Mr. Pratt obtained from the American Consul an indorsement on his legal discharge from the "City of Richmond," which, he says, was represented to him as equivalent to an ordinary passport. But it does not appear that the Consul was apprized by Mr. Pratt of all the circumstances of the case, or that he had any authority to anticipate the opinion of his Government with respect to the character which they primâ facie impressed upon Mr. Pratt, or to secure him from arrest if liable to be treated as an enemy.

Shortly after his arrival at New Jersey, on the 17th of March, Mr. Pratt was arrested and imprisoned, on the grounds of the insufficiency of this document as a passport, and of his having been engaged in actively assisting the enemy of the United States. The latter must be regarded as the real and substantial charge against him.

On the 25th of June he obtained his release, not, as we read the papers, because the United States' Government was satisfied of his innocence, but because, after the termination of the war, there was no longer any necessity, or any reasonable cause, for his detention as a prisoner of war for a single act of hostility, even assuming that charge to be fully made out against him.

He now demands compensation for his detention and imprisonment during this time.

If his imprisonment had been enforced merely because of some previous intention or attempt to run the blockade in the "City of Richmond," we think that his claim for compensation would have been well founded. But we think it is impossible to contend that his connection with the "City of Richmond," of which he had been the chief officer (having regard to the service in which that vessel was actually employed), did not warrant a grave suspicion, to say the least, on the part of the United States' Government that he had impressed upon himself the character of an enemy and a belligerent.

We think, therefore, that the United States' Government were justified in his arrest, and in his imprisonment for such a period as was reasonably necessary for inquiring into the circumstances of the case; and although the actual length of his imprisonment without any trial or formal charge may have been greater than was necessary, or perhaps reasonable, yet, having regard to the situation of affairs at that time in the United States, to the warnings contained in Her Majesty's Proclamation of Neutrality, and to the questions which have been raised and discussed between the two Governments with respect to the equipment of Confederate war vessels by the aid of British subjects, we do not think it all advisable that this case should be taken up by Her Majesty's Government, or made the foundation of any demand or request for compensation from the Government of the United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that with reference to the complaints and claims of the United States' Government against that of Her Majesty, arising out of the course pursued by Great Britain during the late civil war in North America, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a note which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams in continuation of the correspondence on this subject which was published in the Supplement to the "Gazette" of the 10th instant, and more particularly by way of rejoinder to Mr. Adams' note of the 18th ultimo, of which a copy was also inclosed; and to request that we would take this draft note into our consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest possible convenience, whether in our opinion it is right and proper to be sent.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad if possible to be favoured with our Report in time to admit of his signing the note on Thursday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have taken the liberty of suggesting, in the body and margin of the draft note, and in four riders, marked A, B, C, and D, which we have appended to it, certain alterations and additions which we would humbly recommend as proper to be made therein; subject to which we think this draft note is right and proper to be sent.

Lincoln's Inn, November 3, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Boston (No. 40, September 25), inclosing copies of the decisions of the Prize Court in the cases of the "Ella," and "Annie," and "Wando;" and Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that we would peruse the same, and, if we should have any observations to offer thereupon, that we would furnish your Lordship with them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have perused the decisions in the "Sea Witch," the "John A. Hazard," the "Lote Hurley," the "Ella," the "Wando." The "Annie," referred to in the covering letter, is not among the papers sent to us.

With respect to the four first mentioned cases we see no reason for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

No written judgment, however, accompanies the three first cases.

The proceedings in the "Lote Hurley" seem to have been in some degree irregular, as the crew of the prize were, by an accident, not examined; but it appears that they escaped from examination, and that no claimant appeared for the vessel. The log too much favoured the suspicion that she was engaged at the time of capture in blockade-running.

In the "John A. Hazard" the vessel was restored. The circumstances justified her seizure.

In the "Sea Witch" the vessel was restored on payment of captor's costs; and both captor and claimant have appealed from the sentence.

In the "Ella" there appears to have been no claimant. The question decided by the Judge related to the conflicting rights of captors.

In the "Wando" the decision, so far as it affects the merits of the case before the Court, appears to us to be right.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 6, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to the instructions which, after communication with us, were sent to the Admiralty on the 6th of last month respecting the "Shenandoah," he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it appears by a telegram received from the Senior Naval Officer at Liverpool this morning that the "Shenandoah" has just arrived at that port fully manned and armed, but with no colours flying; and to request that we would inform your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, what instructions should be sent to the naval and military authorities at Liverpool with regard to this vessel, and specifically whether they should be ordered to prevent the vessel, by force if necessary, from leaving the Mersey, in anticipation of any further steps to be taken in regard to her, supposing we were not at once prepared to report upon the latter point.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to add that, pending the receipt of our Report, the Board of Admiralty have ordered this vessel to be, if necessary, embargoed, in order to guard against any attempt being made by the vessel suddenly to leave the Mersey.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proper mode of dealing with the "Shenandoah," under the circumstances in which she has now entered the Mersey, requires further and more deliberate consideration. Our former advice, and the instructions of Her Majesty's Government, founded upon it, must be understood to have proceeded upon the hypothesis of the ship, at the time when any question of this kind might arise, still retaining, or assuming, the character of a public ship of war. The circumstance of her being now fully manned and armed, though not flying any flag, may possibly not be conclusive upon that point. We think it will be clearly proper that she should not be suffered, under present circumstances, to leave the Mersey, at all events until the case shall have been further considered: and it seems to us desirable that inquiry should be made from her commander or other chief officer on board, as to the character in which he claims to have his vessel regarded, and the person or persons to whom he alleges her to belong, and by virtue of what title they claim. If it should appear that any question of private ownership by transfer to any persons in this country, or otherwise, is intended to be raised, it may, perhaps, become necessary for the Government of the United States, should they think fit to assert their title, to establish it by legal proceedings in the Court of Admiralty, which, of course, could only be done by the authority and with the concurrence of Mr. Adams, who is (we presume) informed of the ship's arrival in this country.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 7, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of that day in the case of the "Shenandoah," and to acquaint us that a further telegram had that afternoon been received from the Senior Naval Officer at Liverpool, stating that the Commander of the "Shenandoah" had given up the vessel to the Customs authorities, and that a party of men from Her Majesty's ship "Donegal" had, at the request of the Collector of Customs, been ordered to take charge of the vessel.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that it appears that the Commander of the "Shenandoah" has forwarded a letter to Lord Russell which would doubtless be received to-day explanatory of his proceeding. And that the Board of Admiralty request to be informed what instructions are to be sent to Liverpool with regard to the treatment of the officers and men of the "Shenandoah." But that your Lordship, however, concludes that it would be desirable to await the explanations of the Commander of the "Shenandoah" before taking any other steps; but that if we should be of a different opinion, he was to request that we would inform your Lordship what answer should be returned to the Board of Admiralty's inquiry.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to his letter of last evening, respecting the case of the "Shenandoah," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a telegram from Captain Paynter, of Her Majesty's ship "Donegal," stating that he has placed Her Majesty's gun-boat "Goshawk" alongside the "Shenandoah," and requesting to know whether Captain Waddell and some of the crew who have scurvy may be allowed to land, or whether the crew and officers are to be kept on board. And that Captain Paynter also recommends that the "Shenandoah" should be placed in the Birkenhead float so soon as possible.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience our opinion as to the answer which should be sent to Captain Paynter.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's further letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to his letters of yesterday evening and of this morning respecting the "Shenandoah," a copy of a letter from Captain Waddell, stating the circumstances under which he came to this country, and his surrender of the vessel to the Custom-house authorities.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that no communication had yet been received from Mr. Adams on the subject, but that he had stated yesterday to your Lordship that he should address a note to your Lordship requesting the surrender of the vessel as having become the property of the United States; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request our opinion at our earliest convenience on the cases now before us, and as to the instructions which should be given to the naval authorities at Liverpool for the disposal of the vessel, her officers, and crew.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's further letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to his previous letters of this day, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter just received from Mr. Adams claiming the "Shenandoah," requesting that any chronometers taken by her from captured American vessels may be delivered up on account of her owners, and alluding only to the disposal of her crew; and to request that we would take this letter into our immediate consideration with the papers already before us, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be pursued in the matter, and as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it will be proper for Her Majesty's Government, in compliance with Mr. Adams' request, to deliver up to him, on behalf of the Government of the United States, the ship in question, with her tackle, apparel, &c., and all captured chronometers, or other property capable of being identified as prize of war which may be found on board her.

With respect to the officers and crew, we observe that Mr. Adams does not demand their surrender to the United States' Government, and that the only question suggested by him is whether they or any of them ought to be proceeded against, under the direction of Her Majesty's Government, for some offence or offences cognizable by British law. The only offence at which he distinctly points is that of violating the Foreign Enlistment Act, by taking part in hostilities on board of this ship; and as to this, we think it would be proper if some of these men are, as he says, British subjects (by which we understand him to mean natural-born British subjects, for none others are within those provisions of the Act which relate to enlistment or acts of war out of this country), and if evidence can be obtained of that fact, to direct proceedings to be taken against those persons under the 2nd section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. III, cap. 59, before they have become dispersed, so as to escape from justice. If the facts stated by Captain Waddell are true, there is clearly no case for any prosecution, on the ground of piracy, in the Courts of this country; and we presume that Her Majesty's Government are not in possession of any evidence which could be produced before any Court or Magistrate, for the purpose of contravening that statement, or of showing that the crime of piracy has in fact been committed.

We conceive that the substance of the foregoing observations may properly be embodied in the reply to be given to Mr. Adams, and we think it may not be amiss to add, that of course Mr. Adams and his Government must be well aware that any proceedings in this country against persons in the situation of the crew of the "Shenandoah" (as against all others) must be founded upon some definite charge of an offence cognizable by our laws, and supported by proper legal evidence; and that Her Majesty's Government are not at present in a position to say whether such a charge, supported by such evidence, can or cannot be brought against any of the persons in question.

With respect to any of the persons on board the "Shenandoah" who cannot be immediately proceeded against and detained under legal warrant upon any criminal charge, we are not aware of any ground on which they can properly be prevented from going on shore and disposing of themselves as they may think fit; and we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to assume or exercise the power of keeping them under any kind of restraint.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 8.)

Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 15th April, 1864, and to previous Reports respecting the case of Mr. Crutchett, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, two further letters, and their inclosures, which Mr. Crutchett has addressed to the Foreign Office in support of his claim to the interference of Her Majesty's Government; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would again take Mr. Crutchett's claim into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I adhere to the opinion which I have several times had the honour to express in this case. The only new fact is the alleged evidence that foreigners may hold real property in the United States, but this does not touch the principle upon which I have advised your Lordship not to interfere officially on behalf of Mr. Crutchett: that principle is, that a British subject, long resident and domiciled to all intents and purposes in a foreign State, acquiring real property in that State, must have recourse and submit, like a native subject, to the law of the land administered in the proper legal tribunals with respect to that property.

There may, of course, be exceptional cases of absolute refusal or flagrant violation of justice in re minime dubiâ, which would warrant the official interference of a foreign Government; but I am of opinion that Mr. Crutchett's case does not fall under this category. I therefore still humbly advise your Lordship not to direct Sir F. Bruce to make any official application to the United States' Government on behalf of this gentleman.

Lincoln's Inn, November 8, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to his several letters of yesterday's date, on the subject of the "Shenandoah,"* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further letters from the Treasury, and also a letter and its inclosure from the Home Office, respecting this vessel and her officers and crew; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. Two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul-General at the Havana (Nos. 18 and 20 of May 12 and 24) and also a letter dated the 29th July, and its inclosure, from the Admiralty, showing what took place at the Havana with reference to the surrender of the ram "Stonewall," was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not conceive any question to arise in this case under the Xth Article of the Treaty of Washington. Mr. Adams has not demanded the surrender of any of the officers or crew of the "Shenandoah," under that Treaty or otherwise; and according to the decision of the majority of the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of the "Joseph Gerrity" (10 Law Times Reports, new series, p. 499), the offence of piracy, mentioned in the Xth Article of the Treaty, does not extend to any piracy committed upon the high seas (though on board an United States' vessel) which, according to British law, would be triable in a British Court.

With respect to the question whether the officers and crew of the "Shenandoah" may now be permitted to leave the ship and to go on shore, we have only to repeat the opinion expressed in our Report of yesterday's date, namely, that these persons being now in this country, and entitled to the benefit of our laws, cannot be detained except under legal warrant upon some criminal charge duly preferred against them in the ordinary course of law. If Her Majesty's Government are now in possession, or consider it probable that if an information were laid before a Magistrate they would shortly be in possession, of evidence against any of these persons sufficient to justify their committal for trial, either upon any charge of misdemeanour under the Foreign Enlistment Act or upon the graver charge of piracy, we think it would be right and proper to take the necessary proceedings without delay, in order to have such charge duly investigated. But at the present time we are not informed of any evidence in the possession or power of Her Majesty's Government, by which such a charge would be likely to be established.

Lincoln's Inn, November 9, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with the commands of Earl Russell signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st of July last respecting the case of the "Mary" or "Alexandra," he was directed by Earl Russell to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, in which he points out that the Judge's certificate of reasonable cause of seizure had already been sent home by him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that this statement was perfectly true; but that the Colonial Office letter, sending the certificate, was only dated the 24th of August, whereas our Report was dated the 31st of July; and that he was now directed by Earl Russell to inclose that letter, and to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and favour his Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to the commands of Earl Russell we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the only new fact in the papers now laid before us is, that the Judge has certified, as he thought it expedient that he should do, that there was reasonable cause of seizure. We are glad to find that this has been done, and we think it was quite right that it should be done; but beyond this, it does not occur to us to offer any remarks in addition to those which we have already had the honour to offer in this case.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 9, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 8th instant, from Mr. Manley Hopkins, the Hawaiian Consul-General in London, stating that the Hawaiian Consul at Liverpool has written to him respecting the destruction by the "Shenandoah" of a ship under Hawaiian colours, and stating his wish to obtain from the English Government assistance to punish this act of piracy, and vindicate the honour of the Haiwaiian flag; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Hopkins' letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Hopkins' letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it will be proper to inform Mr. Hopkins that it is competent for himself, or for any other person who may be in possession of information or evidence upon which a charge of piracy against the officers and crew of the "Shenandoah" can be supported, to lay an information before the magistrates at Liverpool, upon which a proper legal warrant may issue, and the charge may be duly investigated.

And we think it may properly be added that Her Majesty's Government, upon being placed in possession of information sufficient to satisfy them that such a charge is well-founded, and that proper legal evidence in proof of it is now forthcoming, or is likely to be obtained in sufficient time to support any proceedings which may be commenced, would be prepared themselves to direct such proceedings to be taken, and would, by all means in their power, promote the attainment of the ends of justice in this case.

The Attorney-General to Mr. Hammond.—(Received November 10.)

My dear Sir, Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1865.

YOU will receive herewith our Report in answer to your letter of yesterday's date, as to Lord Clarendon's proposed reply to Mr. Adams' last letter about the "Shenandoah."

With reference to the concluding paragraph of your letter I had prepared the following Memorandum, which I send (though my colleagues have not seen, and, therefore, are not responsible for it), in case it should be useful to the Home Office.

I am, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

Memorandum by the Attorney-General.

I DO not find in the volume of documents forwarded by Mr. Adams, which accompanied Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th October (now waiting for our Report), any evidence by which a charge of piracy against the officers or crew of the "Shenandoah" could be supported. All the actual captures of United States' ships which appear by those documents to have been made by the "Shenandoah" (except those of the barque "William C. Nye" and certain other whalers mentioned in the protest of the master of the "William C. Nye") were made before the actual termination of the war. The "William C. Nye" appears to have been captured in the Arctic seas on the 26th of June last (the other whalers had been captured before her, at other dates which do not appear). It is not stated in the protest of the master of the "William C. Nye" that, at the time of her capture, either he or any of the officers or men of the other captured vessels which he mentions, knew themselves, or informed their captors (or had any reason for supposing it to be otherwise known to those captors), that the war was at an end.

With respect to the other question, whether any of the men now at Liverpool who constituted the crew of the "Shenandoah," upon her arrival in this country, can be prosecuted under the Foreign Enlistment Act, the most material evidence which I have noticed in these documents seems to be in the depositions taken by the United States' Consul at Melbourne, of George Silvester and Thomas Jackson (Inclosures Nos. 17 and 31 in Consul Blanchard's despatch to Mr. Seward of the 23rd February, 1865). Silvester names four persons—"Martin, storekeeper; Hutchinson, engineer; W. Clark, coal-passer; and Jones, engineer-steward," as having (alone out of the crew who came from England in the "Sea King") enlisted under Captain Waddell in the "Shenandoah." He adds that "several from among the crew of the steamer 'Laurel,'" (whom he does not name, but of whom he seems himself to have been one), also enlisted. And he speaks of the destruction of various vessels by the "Shenandoah." Thomas Jackson states that he himself, being a native of Yorkshire, went out from Liverpool in the "Laurel," and afterwards enlisted in the "Shenandoah;" and that all the officers of the "Shenandoah," except the first lieutenant, also came from Liverpool in the "Laurel." He does not, however, state anything to show that those officers, or any of them, were natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, without which they would not be guilty of an offence against the 2nd section of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

No. 380.

Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 7th and 8th instant, respecting the case of the "Shenandoah," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our early consideration, the draft of a letter to Mr. Adams, founded on our former Report, and to request that we would state to your Lordship whether, in our opinion, it may safely and properly be addressed to him.

Mr. Hammond was, at the same time, to observe to us that your Lordship apprehends that some difficulty may eventually arise if the words at the bottom of the first page, and at the top of the following page, of the draft, "and other property capable of being identified as prize of war," should form part of the letter to Mr. Adams. And that difficulties may arise as to identification; and, moreover, that Mr. Adams only asks for chronometers; and that there is probably a great deal of property on board belonging to private individuals who are not here to claim it, and which may not properly be qualified as prize of war.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to add that the whole of the papers which have been before us, together with our Reports, have been transferred to the Home Department, in order that the case may now be dealt with by the Secretary of State for that Department.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we had still before us the documents connected with the proceedings of the "Shenandoah," which were a short time ago transmitted by Mr. Adams to your Lordship's Department, and which might contain matter to affect the proceedings to be taken against some of the crew of the vessel.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the words "and other property, &c.," had better be omitted from the draft, as suggested by your Lordship. Subject to this variation, we think that an answer in the terms of this draft may properly be sent.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that in consequence of the receipt from the Admiralty of intelligence that the crew of the "Shenandoah" had been set at liberty, and that the vessel had been given over to the United States' Consul, it had become necessary to alter the draft of letter to Mr. Adams of which we yesterday signified our approval; and to transmit to us an amended draft, with which the papers referred to in it were tied up.

And to request that we would take this amended draft into our consideration, and, at our earliest convenience, report to your Lordship whether it is right and proper to be sent.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe in Captain Paynter's letter of the 8th of November a statement that all the crew of the "Shenandoah" were shipped on the high seas, but that your Lordship apprehends that that fact would not have prevented proceedings under the second section of the Foreign Enlistment Act against any of those who might have turned out to be British subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the amended draft letter is proper to be sent, and that your Lordship's impression as to the effect of the second section of the Foreign Enlistment Act (so far as relates to natural-born British subjects enlisting on the high seas or elsewhere beyond British territory) is perfectly correct.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir F. Bruce, with reference to a conversation between that Minister and Mr. Seward respecting a threatened raid of Fenians into Canada from the United States.

Sir F. Bruce's despatch and other papers on the subject were also inclosed.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the draft instruction into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we can suggest any addition to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That subject to a slight alteration in the fifth page of the draft, which we have marked in the margin with our initials, we think the proposed letter is fit and proper to be sent, and we see no reason to suggest any addition to it.

No. 383.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1865.

WE have been honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day's date, in which he forwarded to us a copy of the "London Gazette" of the 11th ultimo, containing a correspondence with Mr. Adams on the subject of the "Alabama" and "Shenandoah" claims, he was then directed by Earl Russell to transmit to us a subsequent letter from Mr. Adams, dated the 21st ultimo, further representing the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government on account of the injuries inflicted on the commerce of the United States by the latter vessel.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a draft of the commencement of a letter which Lord Russell proposed address to Mr. Adams in reply to this representation, and was to state to us that, as his Lordship was too much occupied to go through the voluminous documents which accompany Mr. Adams' letter, he would be much obliged by our taking the question into our consideration, and furnishing him with a Report upon which the answer to Mr. Adams can be framed.

The former papers relating to the case of the "Shenandoah" were annexed for reference, if required.*

We have been also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by Earl Russell to request that we would return to him the draft commencement of letter to Mr. Adams respecting the case of the "Shenandoah," which was inclosed in Mr. Hammond's above-mentioned letter of the 25th ultimo, and that we would address to your Lordship as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a Report upon Mr. Adams' note of the 21st ultimo, and its inclosures, which may form the groundwork of an answer to be returned by your Lordship to that representation.

In obedience to these commands we have taken into consideration Mr. Adams' letter of the 21st ultimo, and the voluminous documents which accompany it, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Adams has omitted from the citation which he makes from Earl Russell's reply to Mr. Adams, respecting the conduct of the "Deerhound," the principal passage.

Earl Russell stated that, whether receiving part of the crew of the "Alabama" was a praiseworthy act or not, there existed no power in this country to deliver those men up after their arrival in this kingdom to any authority of the United States.

If, beyond the limits of the British territory, the Commander of the "Deerhound" had improperly interfered to protect them from the belligerent rights of the United States, it was for the Commander of the "Kearsarge" to use the means in his power for the prevention of such interference. Once upon British soil they were entitled to the protection of our laws, which they had in no respect violated; and Her Majesty's Government could not deprive them of that protection because of the possibility (whether afterwards realized or not) that they might again leave this country, and become engaged in further hostilities with the United States.

The demand for their delivery up by Mr. Adams was in fact identical with one which had at various times been made by foreign Governments for the extradition or expulsion of other foreign refugees, Poles, Hungarians, and others, and to which the invariable answer had been that the laws of this country did not empower the Government to take any such measure.

The answer to every such demand is found in our fundamental institutions, in the law of habeas corpus, and of trial by jury. If any evidence had been offered to Her Majesty's Government, identifying any of those persons as British subjects, who had unlawfully enlisted in the service of the Confederate States, or who were guilty of any other violation of our laws, they would have been duly prosecuted, but no such evidence was brought forward.

The case of the "Deerhound," therefore, furnishes, when examined, no materials for complaint against Her Majesty's Government.

The next subject of Mr. Adams' complaint appears to be, the conduct of Her Majesty's Government in not preventing the vessel called the "Sea King" from leaving the shores of England to join another vessel called the "Laurel," which was sent to meet her near Madeira with arms and ammunition.

It is not asserted that Her Majesty's Government had any power or jurisdiction over either of these vessels when beyond the limits of British territory; but unless that assertion be made or implied, the complaint falls to the ground. For, while these vessels where in British waters, no information was given (much less was any evidence offered) to Her Majesty's Government to show that any persons concerned in their outfit or equipment were guilty of, or were contemplating, any infringement of the Foreign Enlistment Act, or of any other law in force in the United Kingdom, nor even that they were suspected of being engaged in any design whatever hostile or dangerous to the United States.

* Law Officers' Reports in "Shenandoah" case, November 15, December 1, and December 29, 1864; February 6, April 21, September 4, and September 24, 1865.

Here again the complaint, if examined, is against the general laws of this country. The Executive power of the British Crown does not, nor does the Executive power, as we read the Act of Congress of 1818, of the United States, extend to the detention and seizure of an unarmed merchant-vessel, on the mere suspicion that she will or may be armed at sea in the waters of a foreign Power.

Under our own municipal law (which goes at least as far as any obligation which may be suppose to attach to us under the law of nations) we are enabled to detain and prosecute natural-born British subjects who may enter into the war service of a foreign Power without the licence of the Crown, or who, within Her Majesty's dominions, may fit out, arm, or equip (or attempt to fit out, &c.) vessels to cruize, or commit hostilities against any State in amity with Her Majesty. But our laws do not and cannot effectually reach subjects of Her Majesty who may go to a foreign State, and there enter into any kind of naval or military service. Mr. Adams is well aware that many subjects of Her Majesty have gone from hence to the United States, and have there, during the present war, entered into the military service of the United States, and fought against the armies of the Confederates, contrary to Her Majesty's Proclamation. Such occurrences as these the law of England (and, it is believed, the law of the United States) cannot prevent, and has very rarely the power to punish. It is obvious (as Mr. Adams himself admits) that the law which prohibits the equipment of vessels destined to make war on States with which Her Majesty is at peace, may, like most other human laws, be evaded. No human means can effectually prevent individuals from purchasing or otherwise acquiring a vessel with the secret intention of arming her beyond the territorial limits of the country, and then cruizing against a State with whom Her Majesty is at peace, or from successfully executing that intention. It is distinctly denied that the Government of any State is, upon any recognized principle of international law, responsible for such an event.

Mr. Adams, feeling that for the equipment and armament of the "Shenandoah" no original responsibility can reasonably be cast on Her Majesty's Government, represents it, however, as the main substance of this part of his complaint that this vessel, after she had been equipped and commissioned, was recognized by Her Majesty's Government as a public ship of war of a lawful belligerent, and was admitted as such into British ports. This is, in truth, nothing more than the old and often-repeated objection to the course adopted by Her Majesty's Government in recognizing both parties in the late war as belligerents, and (if belligerents at all) then, as belligerents, wherever they were found actually carrying on war, whether by sea or by land. Mr. Adams of course knows that the "Sea King" was transferred, when beyond the territory of Her Majesty, to the agents of the Confederate States, and from them (while still beyond Her Majesty's territory) received a commission as a ship of war, under the name of the "Shenandoah." It was a necessary consequence of the principle of neutrality, and of the recognition of the state of war (by virtue of which alone the blockade was enforced with so much severity against neutrals by the United States), that the validity, for the purposes of the war, of such a commission, should be recognized by the government of this country. The supplies given to this vessel, and the hospitality afforded to her in a British port during the continuance of the war, were merely the same which were always afforded to the vessels of war of the United States: to refuse them in such a case would have been not to vindicate, but to depart from, the neutrality declared by Her Majesty. If the fact were (as Mr. Adams suggests) that the supplies so afforded had the effect of enabling the "Shenandoah" to continue hostilities after the Confederate States had ceased to be belligerents, it is obvious that such an occurrence might equally take place in any other case in which a ship of war of any belligerent nation, having taken in ordinary supplies at a neutral port, might continue hostilities after the restoration of peace, either through ignorance of that fact, or from any less excusable motive.

Mr. Adams, while admitting that several prosecutions have been instituted by Her Majesty's Government against persons amenable to British law, who had been shown by probable evidence to have been guilty of violating the Foreign Enlistment Act (Captain Corbett, of the "Sea King," to whom he refers as having never been brought to trial, is awaiting his trial at the present moment), makes it nevertheless matter of complaint that no legal proceedings have been taken against any of the Confederate agents in this country, under whose direction and management various operations in abuse of Her Majesty's neutrality are said to have been conducted. The answer we apprehend to be, that no information supported by evidence on which a prosecution could be judiciously instituted or successfully maintained, has ever been laid before Her Majesty's Government for the purpose of showing that the laws of this country were in fact so violated by any of those persons. Mr. Adams is well aware of the extent to which, not only municipal but also international law permits either of two belligerents to avail themselves of the resources of a neutral country by mercantile agencies, by loans of money, and by the purchase and shipment of every kind of munitions of war, without giving to the other belligerent any cause of complaint against the country where such operations are carried on. Full advantage has been taken of this state of international law by the United States themselves during the recent contest. If, in addition to operations of this nature, the Confederate agents in this country superintended or directed other designs, involving the violation of our laws, they were careful (as it might be expected they would be) to keep their participation in any such illegal acts, as far as possible, out of sight. The agency of Captain Bullock for the Confederate Government was, indeed, to some extent, disclosed by parts of the evidence relating to ships which were the subject of actual or contemplated proceedings by Her Majesty's Government, but not in such a manner nor to such an extent as to make it probable in the judgment of Her Majesty's advisers that, if proceedings had been instituted against him personally, they would have been attended with a successful result. Mr. Adams, however (anticipating the probable answer of Her Majesty's Government upon this subject), refers to the recent transmission, under the orders of Her Majesty's Government, of Captain Bullock's letter to the commander of the "Shenandoah," directing him to cease from the further prosecution of hostilities as proof that Her Majesty's Government have, at least in one instance, considered themselves to be in possession of sufficient evidence of Captain Bullock's authority to control or prevent such hostilities.

It is not made clear to us that proof, even of the extent and kind of authority assumed in that letter over the "Shenandoah" when at sea, would have supplied the want of further evidence of any infringement alleged to have been committed by Captain Bullock of the laws of this country.

The surprise, however, stated by Mr. Adams to have been felt by him on hearing of that circumstance, as well as the inference which he draws from it, of the previous possession of evidence against Captain Bullock by Her Majesty's Government, will probably cease when he learns that this letter was transmitted by Her Majesty's Government in compliance with the request of Mr. Mason (the known accredited Agent in Europe of the Confederate States), made to Earl Russell in a letter dated the 20th June last, after the conclusion of the war. It will hardly be disputed that Earl Russell, whatever might have been the extent of his previous knowledge or ignorance with respect to the acts of Captain Bullock, was entitled to believe, on Mr. Mason's authority, that the letter sent by him for transmission would be effectual for its intended purpose, in which, being a purpose of humanity, especially beneficial to the United States, Her Majesty's Government felt they might safely endeavour so far to co-operate, without any risk of being misunderstood by the United States' Government.

It does not occur to us that it is necessary (having regard to the correspondence which has so recently passed between Earl Russell and Mr. Adams upon the general subject of the claims preferred against this country by the Government of the United States) to offer any further suggestions upon the subject of Mr. Adams' letter of the 21st ultimo.

Lincoln's Inn, November 15, 1865.

My Lord,

Mr. Adams was pleased further to state that he had written so far to us, when the inclosed letter, dated the 11th instant, was received at the Foreign Office from the Hawaiian Consul in London, with the documents annexed to it; and was therefore to request that we would also inform your Lordship what answer should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the correspondence, and the subsequent letter from the Hawaiian Consul above referred to, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that an answer should be sent to the Hawaiian Consul to the following effect:—That Her Majesty's Government are unable to give any official assistance to the Hawaiian Government in this matter; that the act of the "Shenandoah" which is complained of was either that of a belligerent or of a pirate: in the former case it is obvious that it is not within the competence of any neutral Government to take measures against a belligerent for the capture or destruction of vessels belonging to a foreign State upon the high seas; in the latter case it would, no doubt, be competent to Her Majesty's Government to direct a criminal charge to be preferred, if they were in possession of any evidence by which it could be supported. But it is impossible to look upon the mere fact which is stated, of the destruction of a Hawaiian vessel in the month of April (either before the American war had ceased or before it could possibly be known to have ceased), by the "Shenandoah," as constituting a primâ facie case of piracy. If the Hawaiian Consul is otherwise advised, the magistracy and the Courts of Justice in this country are accessible to all parties who conceive that their property, or that of those whom they represent, has been piratically destroyed upon the high seas by persons who are now within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

Lincoln's Inn, November 15, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that with reference to our letter of the 11th instant, reporting on the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. Adams respecting the "Shenandoah," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the reply received from Mr. Adams, and also a Report from the Senior Naval Officer at Liverpool, explaining the steps he took to satisfy himself that none of the crew of the "Shenandoah" were British subjects; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship by 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon our opinion as to whether there was any failure of justice in the proceedings taken by Her Majesty's Government in the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That although we do not entirely share the reliance which Captain Paynter appears to have felt in the replies of Captain Waddell and his officers to the questions which he addressed to them (and which in effect threw upon them the responsibility of becoming informers against any of their own crew who might happen to be natural-born British subjects), we still do not see how, in the absence of any legal warrant and of any evidence or information affecting particular individuals on which a warrant could be applied for, any of these men could have been justifiably detained.

Upon the question of piracy not only was there no evidence producible before a Magistrate at Liverpool in the possession of Her Majesty's Government, but even the documents, of which copies were lately communicated to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Adams, did not, in our judgment, purport to show that any particular piratical act had been committed by Captain Waddell or by any of his crew.

We are not aware that Her Majesty's Government has had even any information beyond mere general rumours and newspaper statements (which although they might justify precautionary measures could not be made the foundation of any criminal charge) to the effect that the "Shenandoah" did ever, in fact, capture or destroy any vessel after she had notice of the cessation of the war.

We think, therefore, that there has been no failure in the proceedings taken by Her Majesty's Government in this case.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith Mr. Adams' reply to your Lordship's note of the 11th instant respecting the "Shenandoah," together with the draft of a rejoinder which your Lordship proposes to make to it; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this draft into our immediate consideration, and, at our earliest convenience, report to your Lordship whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

Lincoln's Inn, November 18, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant stating that, with reference to our Report of the 13th of September, and to our previous Reports respecting the vessels captured in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 47, October 14), inclosing the subsequent proceedings and Orders of Court in the cases of the "Sir W. Peel," "Jenny," "Science," and "Dashing Wave."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Acting Consul also mentions that he had been informed by Mr. Briggs, the Counsel for the claimants, that in all cases in which restitution had been decreed, the decree was accompanied by a refusal to allow costs and damages, but that in each case that has been appealed, such costs and damages have been claimed in the appeal; and to request that we would take these further proceedings into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the formal proceedings which have intervened between the sentence of the Primary Court and the hearing in the Appellate Court do not seem to us to call for any opinion in addition to that which we have already expressed as to these cases, and that we think the issue of the Appeals must be ascertained before we can usefully express any further opinion.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 23, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a further letter received from Mr. Adams, together with the draft of answer which your Lordship proposes to return to it, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion, if possible, by the meeting of the Cabinet appointed for 2 o'clock to-morrow (this day), whether the draft is safe and proper to be sent, and especially whether the principles laid down in Mr. Jefferson's and Mr. Adams' letters may safely be stated as being adopted by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think it will be safe or advisable to refer to the principle laid down in Mr. Jefferson's letter to Mr. Hammond of the 13th May, 1797, as being adopted by Her Majesty's Government. We think that the statement is in itself liable to considerable exception, and that it would require much and careful qualification before it could be accepted as a rule proper and sufficient to govern any State in matters affecting its international relations with other Governments. Upon all former occasions when any passage to the like effect has occurred in any draft submitted for our approval, we have taken the liberty of suggesting its omission, and we feel it our duty now to suggest the omission, for similar reasons, of the passage referred to in the present draft.

We think that Her Majesty's Government may safely signify their adoption of the principle laid down in Mr. Adams' letter to M. Correa de Serra, of March 14, 1818.

We have ventured to suggest a slight change in the language of the 5th page of this draft, and we would also submit to your Lordship's better judgment whether it would or would not be desirable to add to it another paragraph to the effect of that suggested by us in the margin of page 7.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd instant on the draft of a letter to Mr. Adams in reply to his letter of the 18th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of an instruction to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, entering more in detail than in the draft to Mr. Adams into the statements of his letter; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this draft into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the draft despatch is safe and proper to be sent, if possible before the meeting of the Cabinet fixed for 10 o'clock to-day. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter from Mr. Crutchett dated the 15th ultimo, in reply to the letter which was addressed to him in conformity with my Report of the 7th ultimo; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

The previous papers were annexed for reference, if required.*

* Mr. Crutchett, January 5; to Mr. Crutchett, January 6 and January 21; Mr. Crutchett, February 12; to Mr. Crutchett, February 26, 1864; Mr. Crutchett, October 12 and October 13; to Mr. Crutchett, November 14, 1865.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I venture to think that there is no reason for further correspondence with Mr. Crutchett.

It will be found, on referring to his first letter to Earl Russell (5th January, 1864) and the papers which accompanied it, that he distinctly claimed the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on the ground that the United States' troops had dispossessed him of his real estate as well as of the personal estate, which itself was principally machinery closely connected with the real estate.

In his petition (27th September, 1861) to President Lincoln, Mr. Crutchett states as follows: "That a little over seven years since I entered a business undertaking, in view of ultimately aiding the building of the Washington national monument, and also the purchase and restoration of the house of Washington. To carry out this undertaking, I purchased of John A. Washington, Esq., many thousand trees around the mansion and tomb, and all on the estate of the immortal George Washington, &c., to whom I felt the country owed the gratitude of a national monument and the preservation of his interesting homestead. The detail of my undertaking was the conversion of the said Mount Vernon wood into interesting mementos of Washington and his time," &c. He then goes on to state in detail how he built a manufactory and sawed up wood, in order to carry on this speculation, which was interrupted by the conversion of the place into military quarters of the United States' troops, and to ask for redress and compensation from the President.

He had an interview with the President's Secretary, and a violent quarrel with the Quartermaster; his title to the property and his statements as to quantum of damage being both controverted.

He was most wisely and kindly advised by Lord Lyons to employ an attorney, and, in fact, conduct his business legally, like any other person in the United States.

It will be seen that he did employ an attorney, and failed in his endeavour to procure what he considered redress. He again appealed to Lord Lyons, who, in substance, advised him to accept certain payments offered by the United States' Government, as a sort of compromise "until his title to the premises should be ascertained by judicial proceedings." He refused the advice, and demanded that his case should be laid before Her Majesty's Government.

It has always appeared to me that the case was one for the decision of the United States' Courts, just as much as that of a born American who had bought premises and speculated in selling memorials of Washington, and whose speculation had been interfered with by the military exigencies of the country.

Whatever remedy is open to the American citizen in such a case is open to him. There is no reason why Mr. Crutchett should be placed in a more favourable, and he is not placed by the law in any worse, position.

The proper answer, if your Lordship should think any further answer necessary, would be to this effect: That Her Majesty's Government have again examined the case of Mr. Crutchett; the result, briefly stated and in substance, is that he appears to have been domiciled in the United States; to have married and settled there; to have bought landed property and premises there; to have set up a manufactory for the purpose of erecting a national monument to President Washington, and for the purposes of restoring the house and fabricating and selling memorials, carved from Mount Vernon wood, of that distinguished person.

That Her Majesty's Government continue to be of opinion that if, as Mr. Crutchett alleges, this property has been injured and the speculation disturbed or put an end to by the military occupation of the United States' troops during the exigencies of the late war, that Mr. Crutchett must take the same steps, and have recourse to the same legal remedies, as any American citizen would adopt in the like circumstances.

That Her Majesty's Government see no reason to depart from this decision. It is founded upon a principle which they have acted upon in relation to complaints of a similar kind made by British subjects throughout the late American civil war.

I have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 11, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 458), respecting the claim of Mr. F. R. Reading, on account of his late imprisonment in the United States.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the oath stated by Mr. Reading to have been administered to him as the condition of his release (although not strictly speaking an oath of allegiance to the United States) appears to us to be one which ought not to have been exacted from any British subject who had not become a citizen of the United States; and we think it might be desirable (if there should be reason to apprehend that any similar oath may hereafter be exacted from other British subjects not having naturalized themselves or acquired the rights of citizenship in that country) to bring the objection entertained by Her Majesty's Government to the administration of such a form of oath under the notice of the Government of the United States.

So far, however, as relates to Mr. Reading's claim for compensation on account of his imprisonment, we agree in the opinion of Sir F. Bruce that no such claim can be made or supported by Her Majesty's Government. There seems good reason to believe that the punishment for which Mr. Reading was sentenced, and even that inflicted upon him, was disproportionate to the offence with which he stood charged, namely, that of uttering, in a moment of excitement, some seditious words, which were probably not seriously intended.

But we cannot say that the Government of the United States exceeded the rights belonging to them by international law, as against a British subject resident in their territory, in taikng cognizance of Mr. Reading's acts, and trying and punishing him according to their own law (whether civil or martial), as then administered by their tribunals.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th ultimo, on the case of the "Kate Gregg," a vessel formerly belonging to a resident in the so-styled Confederate States, which had obtained a British register at Nassau, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 487, November 28), inclosing a copy of a note addressed to him by Mr. Seward, stating the intention of the United States' Government to give instructions for the capture of this and other similarly registered vessels.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 18th ultimo, respecting the "Kate Gregg," previously referred to us, was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Seward, and the intimation which it contains, is of so grave and extraordinary a character as to make it necessary for us to state very distinctly our view of the law applicable to this subject.

First, with respect to the duty of the Registrar-General of Shipping at the port of Nassau:—Under the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104, sec. 42), it is the duty of that officer to register, as a British ship, any ship for which such registry may be claimed at his port, as soon as the requisites prescribed for that purpose by the Act shall have been complied with.

Those requisites are—

1. A declaration by the alleged owner or owners in terms of the 38th section of the Act, which must show that the owners are (to use a general expression) British subjects (see section 18), and that no person, not being a British subject, has any legal or beneficial share or interest in the ship.

2. If the title has been acquired by sale from a foreigner, the bill of sale under which the ship was vested in the person requiring to be registered as owner must be produced (see section 40); and

3. If a provisional certificate is given by a British Consular Officer as to a ship transferred to British subjects at a foreign port, such certificate must state, inter alia, the time and place of the purchase, and the names of the purchasers (see section 54).

If in the case of the "Kate Gregg," or in any similar case, these requisites have been duly complied with, the duty of the Registrar of Shipping (who is not a judicial, but a ministerial officer), is to grant the registry as desired. Such registry does not make any ship a British ship if the declaration be false, or the bill of sale fictitious, or if foreigners are in fact interested therein; but the Registrar is bound to act upon the supposition of the truth of those documents, and he has no authority to try or decide upon the validity of the title. If, on the other hand, the legal requisites are not duly complied with, the registry of course ought to be refused.

Next, as to Mr. Seward's intimation that the war vessels of the United States will be ordered to seize, as property of the United States, any ships which, at the end of the late war, had a Confederate registry, or (to use Mr. Seward's expression) "are supposed, upon probable evidence, to have belonged to rebels," and which, having since obtained at Nassau or elsewhere a British register, may hereafter be found upon the high seas sailing under the British flag.

If such orders are intended to be confined to ships which may have been registered as British under false and fraudulent pretences, while really continuing to be owned in the United States, no exception need be taken to them in point of principle, though in practice they might, and probably would, lead to dangerous and embarrassing questions between the two Governments, as it is obvious that the fact would be liable to be controverted in every case. If the fact were once admitted, or clearly established, the right of such ships to the use of the British name and flag would be thereby disproved, and the authority of the Government of the United States to deal with them as subject to its own laws on the high seas, as well as within United States' territory, could not, in that case, be further disputed.

But the case is wholly different if Mr. Seward really means to contend for so new and alarming a proposition as that a merchant-ship which, at or before the close of the war, was the private property of a citizen of the United States engaged in the rebellion, and which has been bonâ fide sold and delivered by such owner to a British subject, and brought (either before sale or after sale) into a British Colony, and there registered after such sale as a British ship, can be reclaimed and forcibly retaken from its British owner upon the high seas, on the ground that his vendor was, at the time of the sale, a rebel, and liable to the penalties of rebellion by the law of the United States. No foreign nation can for a moment be expected to admit that a question of title to private property so acquired by one of its subjects can be decided by force of arms in time of profound peace upon the high seas. This would not be endurable even if there were (which in our opinion there is not) the slightest pretext for the doctrine that the crime of rebellion divests all persons engaged in it of all title to all their private property, so as to incapacitate them from transferring any part of such property, although in their actual possession or power, by sale and delivery to a foreigner; or that the penalty of confiscation (to which the rebel in his own country may be subject) can be set up to invalidate in such a case the title of a foreign purchaser to any ship or other chattel, after the property which he has bought and paid for has been removed by him beyond the territory and jurisdiction of the vendor's Government. We do not hesitate to say that the seizure of any vessel so bonâ fide acquired and owned by British subjcts, for such a cause, and under such circumstances, would be a mere act of violence, and in fact of war, wholly indefensible upon any known principles of private or public international law.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 17, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th of January instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 19th of November last, relative to the seizure of the British vessel "Albion" by the Revolutionary authorities at Ciudad Bolivar, in which we expressed an opinion that the owners of the vessel in question should apply for redress to their employers, the Venezuelan Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter which had since been received from the Company to which the "Albion" belongs; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the statement now made alters the view of the case originally adopted by us.

The previous correspondence was therewith inclosed for convenience of reference.*

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's note of the 12th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 10th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to inclose therewith for our consideration a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 10th of December last, respecting the case of the "Albion."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there are no new facts in the papers now submitted to us which can induce us to alter the opinion expressed in our former Report.

We are still of opinion that the "Albion" was chartered and employed, pro hâc vice at least, as a Venezuelan vessel by the Venezuelan Government, during the civil war in that country, and that her owners must seek redress for any wrong they may have suffered, in the same manner as the owners of any other Venezuelan vessel. We do not understand that any different view is taken by the owners of the vessel; for the complaint in Messrs. Leech and Co.'s letter of the 5th January, 1865, appears to be that the Venezuelan Government had not, when their last advices were received, complied with an application for compensation which had been made to them.

We presume, from the tenour of the despatch of Governor Manners Sutton (7th November, 1864), that the Venezuelan Government do not dispute their obligation to award compensation to these owners; and we should therefore hope and expect that such compensation will in fact be made. If the arrangement of the owners' claim can be facilitated by the use of good offices on the part of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Venezuela, we think that such good offices may properly be used for that purpose.

Notification.

Foreign Office, January , 1865.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas a despatch transmitting a communication which he had received from the Foreign Office of the Venezuelan Government, announcing that the blockade of the ports and coasts from the mouth of the Vagres to Navios, the canals formed by the Delta of the Orinoco, and the banks of that river to Ciudad Bolivar, had been raised, and also transmitting a copy and translation of a Decree of the Venezuelan Government raising the blockade of the said ports and places.

The following are copies of the communication addressed to Her Majesty's said Chargé d'Affaires from the Foreign Office at Caracas, and of the Decree of the Venezuelan Government, both above referred to:—

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 9th ultimo respecting Mr. Daly's claim on the Government of Venezuela, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith the reply which has been returned from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to the instruction which was thereupon addressed to him (No. 5), and also a further letter, dated the 24th ultimo, from Mr. Bernard Daly, relative to the disputed point of the amount of interest on the said claim; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would again take this question into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to any further steps which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am still of opinion that the directions given by Her Majesty's Government (founded on the Report of my predecessor in office, dated February 28, 1860), to Mr. Orme, dated March 30, 1860, namely, to insist upon the claim of Mr. Daly "being settled by prompt payment in cash of the sum of 57,113 dollars 78 cents, together with interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum, as demanded in your note," should be adhered to as the final decision of Her Majesty's Government upon this intricate and long-protracted case.

The letter of Mr. Daly, December 24, 1864, to your Lordship, seems to establish that the payment of such interest as your Lordship has ordered to be enforced, is in accordance with the existing usage of the Venezuelan Government towards other creditors.

But I found my opinion in this, as in my former Report, upon the fact that the decision announced by Her Majesty's Government in 1860, and accepted by the Venezulan Government of that day, ought to be considered as final.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th of January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 8), inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Chitty, requesting the support of Her Majesty's Legation in his claim to be indemnified by the Venezuelan Gouernment for the losses sustained by him as lessee of the estate called Obra Pia de Cata, in consequence of the emancipation of the slaves in that country in the year 1854; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Chitty's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that an answer should be sent to Mr. Chitty to the effect that Her Majesty's Government altogether decline to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Caracas to interfere on his behalf in this matter.

With respect to injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon his landed property, Mr. Chitty has the same remedies, and is in the same condition, as any other person domiciled in the Caracas.

On general principles Her Majesty's Government are always much indisposed to attempt any interference with the ordinary course of law respecting landed property in a foreign State, on behalf of one of Her Majesty's subjects who has voluntarily domiciled himself in that State; and this general indisposition is greatly increased in this particular instance, by a consideration of the nature of the injury which Mr. Chitty alleges himself to have received. A British subject who was a slave-owner in any part of the world in the year 1854 ought to have known that he could obtain no assistance from the British Government, on the ground that his slaves had become, by the law of the State in which they were resident, free men.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 23.)

Doctors' Commons, February 22, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Mr. Mathison, in charge of Her Majesty's Legation at Caracas (No. 18, July 23, 1864), announcing the arrangements which had been made for the settlement of certain recognized claims, whilst the sums amounting to about 137,117 dollars 95 cents, due to Messrs. Syers, Graf, Nocke Myer and Co., Andreal and Sprick, were to be paid with 20 per cent. out of the import duties of the firm of H. L. Boulton and Co., of La Guayra.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit two despatches on the subject which have been received from Mr. Edwardes since his arrival at Caracas,* stating the circumstances under which the Venezuelan Government decline to carry out the proposed arrangement, and to request that I would take these, together with the former papers, into consideration, and inform your Lordship of our opinion as to the nature of the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Edwardes, in reply to the observations contained in his despatches Nos. 6 and 9.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as I understand the despatch of Mr. Edwardes, it appears that, with respect to these claims, two negotiations were contemporaneously, or nearly so, carried on: one by Mr. Mathison, under directions from Her Majesty's Government at Caracas, with the Venezuelan Government; the other, in London, with Mr. Orme, Don Guzman, acting then in what character it does not appear, but now the present Venezuelan Prime or Foreign Minister, and a Mr. Alexander Syers, who represented himself as the Agent of the claimants, but without any sanction from Her Majesty's Government. These two negotiations seem to have resulted in different arrangements, the one effected by Mr. Mathison being that of which Her Majesty's Government have signified their formal approbation.

The matter is still further complicated by a disavowal, on the part of the claimants, of Mr. Alexander Syers as their Agent in the other arrangement. The present Venezuelan Government repudiate the arrangement of their predecessors in office with Mr. Mathison, and also state that the penury of their Treasury will compel them to seize the proceeds of the Customs, placed in the hands of Mr. Boulton, as a security for the execution of Mr. Mathison's arrangement.

Mr. Edwardes, rebus sic stantibus, states various reasons why he should be allowed to re-open the question as to the settlement of these claims, and exercise his discretion as to their re-arrangement with the present Venezuelan Government. These reasons appear to me deserving of grave consideration; they incline me to think that probably, if the question of the national character of the claimants had been prominently put forward in the first instance, Her Majesty's Government would not have pressed, strongly at least, several of them on the Venezuelan Government. There seems to be a bonâ fide penury of the Venezuelan Treasury; there is every reason, a priori, why Her Majesty's Minister on the spot, knowing all the circumstances, and the actual condition and capabilities of these perpetually fluctuating Governments, should be entrusted with a large discretion; there is also in this case that kind of double arrangement, above adverted to, which gives to the Venezuelan Government some excuse for their present course.

On the whole, therefore, unless Her Majesty's Government have guaranteed in some way to the individual claimants that the Mathison arrangement shall be executed, I think that it would be wise to give Mr. Edwardes the right, which he seeks, of exercising his discretion on this class of complicated and uncertain claims. Whatever may be the decision of Her Majesty's Government on this point and as affecting the present question, it would seem to me, as to Mr. Edwardes, most desirable that, for the future, the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of foreign subjects should be invoked much more rarely and cautiously than it appears to have been of late years at the Caracas by Her Majesty's Representative there.

No. 401.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Doctors' Commons, March 3, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter, dated the 9th ultimo, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas, in which he requests information as to the course he should pursue in regard to certain points which may be raised in investigating British claims on Venezuela; and to request that I would take this letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be given to Mr. Edwardes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the general question of all these claims, it is certainly competent to Mr. Edwardes to review all those as to which Her Majesty's Government has not given positive directions, although they may have been received at the Legation.

The claimants appear to fall practically under these categories:—

1. British-born.
2. Naturalized.
3. Recognized for a length of time as entitled to British protection.
4. Mercantile houses long established, and persons bonâ fide domiciled in British possessions.

With respect generally to the evidence which Mr. Edwardes should require as to the fact that the claimant is a British subject, negatively Mr. Edwardes is not bound to be satisfied with the certificate mentioned of the Petty Judge of the country; affirmatively, it would, perhaps, be unwise to lay down any fixed rule as to the evidence which he would invariably require upon this point, where the claimant professes to be British-born.

But Mr. Edwardes might, in all cases of reasonable doubt, require documentary proof from the parish register, and the affidavit of proper credible witnesses, to identify the claimant as being the persons mentioned in the register.

As to claimants on the footing of being entitled to British protection, Mr. Edwardes would probably distinguish between cases in which the claimant had been long in the enjoyment of British protection, and those in which the claimant had been recently admitted, perhaps without much inquiry, during the times of civil war.

As to claimants on the ground of naturalization, Mr. Edwardes might require the proper evidence from the Home Office, if the naturalization took place before the passing of 7 and 8 Vic., cap. 66; and if after that date, the proper certificate of enrolment in the Court of Chancery.

Mr. Edwardes is no doubt right in supposing that the opinion which, while in Spain, he obtained from the Law Officers of the Crown was correct. That opinion must have been that children born out of the Queen's legiance, whose fathers or grandfathers, by the father's side, were natural-born subjects, are to be considered in every respect as natural-born subjects, but no other children, with the exception of children born in the house of the Legation or on board one of Her Majesty's ships.

In the case of claimants from merchants' houses established at Trinidad, or persons bonâ fide domiciled there, Mr. Edwardes is entitled to require proper evidence from the Governor or authorities of the island as to the fact; but I think that if the evidence satisfies Mr. Edwardes that the claim be founded upon the existence of a long-established mercantile house, or a bonâ fide domicil in that island, that the claimant ought to be admitted to British intervention on his behalf.

With respect to the particular case of the Anderson family, and others of which this is a sample, I think Mr. Edwardes would be justified in refusing to interfere in any instance in which the claimant's loss was consequent upon his having taken a part in the political troubles of the State, or where a nominal claim was put forward on behalf of A who had not taken such a part, but really on behalf of B, who had so mixed himself up with the political revolutions of the country.

Mr. Hartman's case appears to be one in which Mr. Edwardes may exercise his discretion as to the amount of the claim which shall be preferred. And it may be well here to repeat the observations already made, and generally applicable to all these cases, that unless Her Majesty's Government have already closed the door to inquiry by positive orders as to the sum to be demanded, Mr. Edwardes would do well to cause all these claims to be subjected to a proper investigation, probably by selecting certain persons whom he can trust to examine them all, with or without the assistance of the Venezuelan authorities as Mr. Edwardes may think best.

As to the interest to be demanded on consolidated bonds and the like, setting aside exceptional causes, the general rule suggested by Mr. Edwardes is sound, namely, that the British claimant should be in the same position as the native subject who enters into the same speculations.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 21.)

Doctors' Commons, March 20, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 6, February 9) respecting a claim of Messrs. Schloss and Co. and Mr. Michelsen, which Mr. Bingham had been instructed to urge on the Venezuelan Government; that the previous correspondence was therewith inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which should now be pursued by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the claims of Mr. Scholefield, on which the claims of Messrs. Schloss and Co. and Mr. Michelsen are founded, appear to have been carefully considered by Lord Aberdeen after taking the advice of the then Queen's Advocate, but whose opinion is not inclosed to me. His Lordship, as well as Lord Clarendon, must have been satisfied that the claims were well founded in principle; and the fact that the Granadian Government has paid its quota of the debt strongly confirms the justice of the conclusion at which their Lordships arrived.

No reply appears to have been made to the answer of the Venezuelan Government (July 18, 1861) to the letter of Mr. Orme (November 25, 1858), which placed before that Government the despatch of Lord Clarendon to Mr. Bingham. That answer does not, however, assign satisfactory reasons for refusing to discharge the national obligations. At least, I collect from the despatch of Mr. Stewart (No. 62, 31st December, 1842) that these bonds in the hands of many foreign creditors could not have been presented within the time prescribed by the Government; and certainly no Government has a right to get rid of its liabilities by superadding to the original contract, by virtue of which it obtained the money of foreigners, an impossible or an impracticable condition,—if, indeed, it be entitled to make the fulfilment of its contract depend upon any condition subsequent to the completion of the contract, which is onerous to the creditor.

Nor does it seem to me competent to a Government which has drawn a bill of exchange for "value received" to say that this language is a "mere formality," or to repudiate a direct acknowledgment of the validity of such a bill on the ground that "an intrusive Administration issued an order for the liquidation of it" (Inclosure 3 in Mr. Edwardes' despatch No. 6).

Certainly, the delay which has taken place in replying to this refusal of payment by the Venezuelan Government is to be regretted; but I see no sufficient reason why the ground taken up by Lord Clarendon on behalf of these bonds and bills of exchange should be abandoned, and I think Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas should be instructed to urge, unless he have some good reason to assign for not doing so, these claims again upon the Venezuelan Government, and to express the dissatisfaction of Her Majesty's Government with the reasons assigned for the refusal to discharge them.

I do not find in these papers any statement as to whether Ecuador has paid her share of the debt, which I gather from the despatch of Lord Clarendon that she ought to have done.

Lincoln's Inn, May 26, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's command signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 10th February last respecting Mr. Chitty's claim against the Venezuelan Government on account of the losses he sustained through the emancipation of slaves, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Chitty, dated the 25th ultimo, requesting a re-consideration of his case; that, for our convenience, the former papers connected with this case were submitted to us; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Chitty's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that an answer should be sent to Mr. Chitty to the effect that Her Majesty's Government adhere to their determination not to interfere in this matter. That so far as the question of slave property is concerned—which was one only of the grounds alleged in the former commuuication—it does not seem to Her Majesty's Government to affect the substance of the question, whether Mr. Chitty's interest in the continuance of slavery in Venezuela was in his own right or in a representative character, or whether he or the deceased whom he represented, was the proprietor of slaves, or was merely interested in the continuance of slave labour for the purposes of a particular Venezuelan contract. His claim for compensation is, in each case, equally founded upon a loss, said to have been occasioned by the abolition of slavery in Venezuela, and by no other cause. Against such a loss a British subject is not entitled to be protected by Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying memorandum dated the 10th instant (together with the papers to which it refers), setting forth the circumstances under which your Lordship has been called upon to take steps to enforce the claims of British bondholders on the Venezuelan Government arising out of the conditions of the loan which was negotiated by Venezuela in this country in 1862.

That I should perceive that Her Majesty's Government have never made themselves responsible for this loan, and though the Venezuelan Government have committed a distinct breach of faith, your Lordship is disposed to restrict the interference of Her Majesty's Representative in Venezuela to peaceable remonstrance; but that your Lordship would be glad to receive my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government are bound in any way to interfere further than they have done in behalf of the bondholders.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not bound to interfere further than they have done on behalf of the Venezuelan bondholders.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that General Falcon's offer for the settlement of this case should be accepted.

I am inclined to agree with the view of the conduct of the master and crew which is taken by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas. I doubt very much their innocence and the truth of the story which they tell; and certainly—primâ facie at least—the Venezuelan Government were fully justified in treating the vessel as belonging to the enemy.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it cannot be denied that the Venezuelan Minister applies to English subjects born in Venezuela, the law which England applies to Venezuelan subjects born in England.

I think too that the general principles upon which he founds his particular position are sound. It is to be observed, however, that by Treaty stipulations, and even by long usage, a State may concede to the subjects of another privileges which are not accorded to its own subjects. Many circumstances may make such a usage not impolitic or unreasonable. When such usage is abrogated by the municipal law ample time should certainly be given to the subjects of the State from whom the privilege is withdrawn to make up their minds whether they will remain in or leave the country in which this change, in their former relation to it, has been effected.

No. 407.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 23, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Venezuela (No. 93), containing a Report on British claims, of which he also inclosed a list; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the same into cansideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the degree of support which should be given to the claims in the list, or any of them. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose some previous despatches from Mr. Edwardes* on the subject of certain British claims as bearing on his final Report.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, transmitting for my information, in connection with the papers already before me on the subject, a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 97) respecting British claims on Venezuela.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, transmitting Mr. Edwardes' despatch No. 76 relative to the claim of Messrs. Schloss and Co. and Michelsen, and also a despatch No. 17 of the 24th of March to, and No. 99 of the 22nd ultimo from, Mr. Edwardes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That after reading the very clear and able account which Mr. Edwardes gives of the disgraceful manner in which claims have been fabricated against the Venezuelan Government, and for which it appears that in too many instances the countenance and protection of this country has been fraudulently obtained, it is impossible to doubt the necessity of the searching investigation which, with so much industry and pains, Mr. Edwardes has instituted both into the character and the amount of the claims which, in their corrected shape, he now submits for your Lordship's approbation.

I have no hesitation in advising your Lordship to accept in every respect the Report which has been made by Mr. Edwardes, by which I mean that the claims which he admits should be sanctioned, with the reductions which he points out, and those which he rejects should be rejected. It seems to me that the ends of justice will be best obtained by placing implicit confidence in this arrangement. As it appears from his despatch of November 22, since these papers were first laid before me, that the Venezuelan Government have now recognized the necessity of discharging their obligations to the foreign creditor, it has become unnecessary that I should say more than that I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Edwardes that the payment of 6 per cent. upon the amounts fixed must be considered as an integral part of the arrangement which there is every reason now to hope will be finally completed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

20 A	19,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Vaughan. Right of cutting mahogany. Rights of ownership of Mosquito Government, within reserved district, under Treaty of Managua (1860) (Appendix.)	186

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
21	Nov. 13, 1866	Queen's Advocate	Mosquito Indians. It was not intended by the Treaties between Great Britain and Honduras and Nicaragua, that the Mosquito Indians should be placed absolutely under the Honduras Government	12

CHILE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
22	Jan. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mattias Cousino." Claim of Mr. Long to be owner of the vessel. Provisional certificate of registry does not necessarily prove the nationality of the vessel	12
23	6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Tongoy." Capture by Spanish blockading squadron whilst sailing under Chilean flag, but stated to belong to a British subject. Question to be decided by Prize Court	13
24	9,	Queen's Advocate	Application of British merchants at Valparaiso for permission to remove their goods from bonded warehouses in that city. Merchants have no right to complain of conditions imposed by Chilean Government. They should be informed that Her Majesty's Government cannot hold the Chilean Government responsible for any injury they may sustain from belligerent operations	13
25	23,	Queen's Advocate	Threat of the Commander of the Spanish ship of war "Berenguela" to bombard Coquimbo in the event of his ship being fired at from shore. Right of a belligerent to bombard a town, notwithstanding the presence of neutrals	13
26	Feb. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Notice for "London Gazette" of the blockade of the ports of Valparaiso and Caldera	14
27	22,	Queen's Advocate	Seizure by Spanish ship "Blanca" of a cargo of blasting powder belonging to Messrs. Rose, Innes, and Co., of Valparaiso. Seizure justifiable, gunpowder being primâ facie contraband. The question should, however, be adjudicated by a Prize Court	15
28	24,	Law Officers	Vessel supposed to be fitting out for service of Chilean Government. Such vessel should be detained, if her armament and equipment should be ascertained to be contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Act	15
29	28,	Queen's Advocate	Application of Messrs. Uthhoff and Co. to be informed whether lead is contraband of war. They should properly consult their own professional adviser in the matter. Ambiguous character of lead	15
30	Mar. 3,	Queen's Advocate	Seizure by Spanish ship "Blanca" of blasting powder belonging to Messrs. Rose, Innes and Co., of Valparaiso. Messrs. Rose must rely upon their own exertions to establish their claim upon Spanish Government	16
31	20,	Queen's Advocate	Raising of blockade of Caldera by Spanish forces. Notice for Gazette	16
32	27,	Queen's Advocate	Seizure of British vessel "Marshal Pelissier" by authorities at Coquimbo. Question of seizure of a vessel for a case of contraband wholly unconnected with the voyage on which the vessel was seized	17
33	27,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mattias Cousino." Offer of Spanish Admiral to place that vessel under the custody of Commodore Harvey, until final adjudication should be accepted	17
34	Apr. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Destruction of certain prizes by Spanish Commander-in-chief, on the raising of the blockade of Caldera. Legality of act, but Government of captor does not escape its liability to Neutral owner	18
35	9,	Queen's Advocate	Notice issued by Spanish Admiral declaring coal to be contraband of war. Her Majesty's Government cannot complain of this declaration	18

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
36	Apr. 14, 1866	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Dolphin." Her detention by Spanish Admiral, on suspicion of being destined to supply the enemy with coal	19
37	14,	Queen's Advocate	Threat of Spanish Admiral to bombard Valparaiso, in the event of torpedoes being employed against his squadron. Such proceeding would be justified by international law	20
38	May 2,	Queen's Advocate	Detention of the "Dolphin." Confirming former opinion in consequence of the refusal of the agent of the owners to produce certificate of destination	20
39	..	Law Officers	Bombardment of Valparaiso. Claim of Messrs. Aitken, Bodger and Co. Approving answer	21
40	31,	Queen's Advocate	Decree issued by Chilean Government prohibiting neutral vessels from communicating with Spanish ships of war under the penalty of not being allowed to enter Chilean ports. Competency of Chilcan Government to issue such decree	21
41	31,	Queen's Advocate	Notice for Gazette of the raising of the blockade of Valparaiso	22
42	Nov. 9,	Queen's Advocate	Capture of the British vessel "Thalaba" by Chilean gun-boat. Legality of capture	23

CHINA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
44	Jan. 8,	Law Officers	Execution of a Chinese subject who was delivered up by the British authorities at Hong Kong	24
45	Feb. 16,	Law Officers	Opinion of proposed regulations for the registration of mortgages, bills of sale, and companies in China and Japan. Suggests disallowance of regulation relating to Joint Stock Companies	24
46	27,	Law Officers	Tenure of land in British Settlements at Chinese ports. Opinion upon points on which Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Wade disagree	25
47	28,	Queen's Advocate	Outrage committed on Mr. W. H. Baldwin by Chinese soldiers near Ching-kiang. Her Majesty's Government should demand compensation	25
48	Mar. 8,	Law Officers	Surrender to British Consul, by Chinese authorities at Kiu-kiang, of the British subject Mansfield, charged with the commission of certain offences in China. Claim of Chinese Government under the XVIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, to his trial before a Mixed Court. Unable to give an opinion in consequence of imperfect wording of Chinese version of Treaty	26
49	10,	Law Officers	Claim of Chinese, born in the Straits Settlements, to British protection in China. Justice of claim. Suggestions with regard to distinguishing them as British subjects	26
50	20,	Law Officers	Trial of British subjects accused of crimes in China before a mixed Court. Application of Article L of Treaty of Tien-tsin. Refer to former Report with regard to omission in XVIth Article of Treaty	27
51	May 14,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. E. Schmidt. By the Order in Council Mr. Schmidt would be amenable to the French authorities with respect to all transactions which happened between the 18th March, 1863, when he was matriculated as a French subject, and the 30th October, 1865, when he obtained his registration as a British subject	28

52	May 28, 1866	Queen's Advocate	Opening of port of Hainan. Consider that Her Majesty's Government should not insist upon that port being opened until a British Consul has been appointed to reside there	28
53	June 22,	Law Officers	Appointment of a Public Prosecutor to conduct cases in Supreme Court for China and Japan. Inexpediency of appointing a Public Prosecutor, with salary. A general retainer should be given to Mr. Myburgh, or some other fitting person, upon the ordinary terms of professional remuneration	29
54	Aug. 1,	Queen's Advocate	Approving Sir R. Alcock's interpretation of the Articles in the Treaty of Tien-tsin, with regard to the right of navigation of the inland waters of China, by steamers under a foreign flag	29
55	29,	Law Officers	Are of opinion that the Chinese subjects resident in Shanghae are amenable to the jurisdiction and authority of the Chinese Government, and liable to taxation	30
56	Sept. 26,	Law Officers	Treaty of Tien-tsin. Difference in language of the English and Chinese version of Article XVI. In accordance with Article L of Treaty, the English version should be adhered to	30
57	Oct. 30,	Law Officers	Approving proposed regulations for the registration of Companies. Defects in regulation for the registration of mortgages and bills of sale have not been remedied	31

COLOMBIA.*

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
57 A	Jan. 24,	Queen's Advocate	Case of G. Holmes, shot at Colon by a sentry of the United States' ship "James Adger." Claim of United States to exclusive jurisdiction at Colon. Approving representations to United States' Government (Appendix.)	187
57 B	Feb. 22,	Queen's Advocate	Right of Great Britain, under Article IV of the Treaty of the 18th of April, 1825, with Colombia, to claim admission of her produce into the ports of that State, at the lower rate granted to the native produce of Venezuela and Ecuador (Appendix.)	187
57 C	Apr. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Antioquia." Seizure by military authorities. Claim to indemnity on account of detention. Liability of Colombian Government limited to period of detention (Appendix.)	188
58	Sept. 12,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. C. J. Irwin. Being the son of a British-born parent, he is entitled to British protection, except in Venezuela, in which country he was born	31
58 A	Dec. 21,	Queen's Advocate	Questions as to the right of the Colombian Government to levy a transit-rate on British mails conveyed across the Isthmus of Panama by the Panama Railway Company; and to levy tonnage-dues in the ports of the Republic on British mail steam-packets. Exemption of the United States and France from such dues. Her Majesty's Government justified in resisting such claim (Appendix.)	188

ECUADOR.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
59	June 23,	Queen's Advocate	Question of removal of certain Spanish subjects who had embarked on board the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamer "Favorita." English merchant-vessels and steamers not carrying Her Majesty's Commission are liable to the jurisdiction of local authorities	32

See also "NEW GRANADA."

FRANCE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
60	Jan. 9, 1866	Law Officers	Extradition Treaty. Denounced by France. Approving proposed despatch to Lord Cowley. No insuperable objection in principle to a Treaty for the extradition of escaped criminals	33
61	27,	Queen's Advocate	Convention between France and Monaco. Observation on effect of such Convention, with regard to other nations having Treaties containing "most favoured nation" clauses	33
62	Feb. 22,	Law Officers	Treaties of Extradition with Prussia and Hans Towns. Observations on drafts	34
63	22,	Law Officers	Extradition Treaty. An "Acte d'Accusation" could not, under the present law, be accepted as sufficient to warrant the extradition of an accused person. Suggests, however, the submission to Parliament of a Bill allowing, under certain restrictions, magistrates to commit upon an "Acte d'Accusation." Consider it feasible to prepare a general measure to enable Her Majesty to conclude Conventions with foreign Powers, on certain terms, enumerated	35
64	23,	Law Officers	Extradition Treaty. Conference at Foreign Office. Could not detain, under existing law, by a simple French warrant, a person whose extradition was demanded. Suggests application to Parliament. Extradition of escaped convicts. Power of a person whose extradition was demanded to produce exculpatory evidence	36
65	Mar. 10,	Law Officers	"Commissions Rogatoires." Necessity of an Act of Parliament to oblige tribunals in this country to execute commissions in France solely by application to French authorities. Suggestions with regard to such an Act, and Order in Council. Refers to Act 19 and 20 Vict., cap. 113, regarding examination of witnesses in this country at request of a foreign Court	37
66	12,	Law Officers	Extradition Treaty. Report on opinion of Sir T. Henry with regard to allowing persons whose extradition was demanded, to controvert, before the magistrate, the truth of the depositions	38
67	23,	Law Officers	Application of Declaration of the Congress of Paris of the 16th of April, 1856, with regard to neutral property, pending hostilities between Spain, Chile, and Peru. Are of opinion that the two latter Powers, having acceded to the above declaration, are bound to respect and act upon it. Limit to which Spain is bound to respect goods proved to be neutral, on board enemy's ships	39
68	Apr. 4,	Law Officers	Approving instructions to the Governors of British Guiana on the subject of the immigration of escaped convicts into that Colony	40
69	11,	Law Officers	Danube navigation. Amended Order in Council referring to Protocol of Conference of Paris of the 28th of March	40
70	14,	Queen's Advocate	Capture of a convoy of merchandize belonging to certain British merchants, sent into the interior of Mexico under a promise of protection from French Commandant. Agree that it would not be equitable to hold the Mexican Government responsible	40
71	May 8,	Law Officers	Extradition Treaty. Visit of Sir T. Henry to Paris. Amendments suggested by him in Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 75, by which difficulties might be got over. Suggest introduction into Parliament of a short Bill, applicable to all cases of extradition, under Treaties between Great Britain and foreign States	41
72	26,	Queen's Advocate	Slave Trade on African coast. No objection to proposed amendments in identical instructions issued by the British and French Governments in 1859, for the guidance of their naval officers	42
73	June 7, 1866	Law Officers	Bombardment of Valparaiso. Interview of Lord Cowley with M. Drouyn de Lhuys, as to liability of Spain for damage done to neutral property. Are of opinion that Spain is not liable, such damage having been done during legitimate hostilities	42
74	25,	Law Officers	Extradition Treaties. Expedient to adopt the alterations suggested by Sir T. Henry in proposed Bill	43
75	Sept. 3,	Law Officers	Claim of French Consul at Galle, Ceylon, to assistance of Colonial authorities to detain French subjects convicted by him of crimes on board of a French ship. Authorities cannot give such support. Question as to expediency of granting such power to Colonial authorities	43
76	Oct. 30,	Law Officers	Case of M. Lamirande. Extradition from Canada for the crime of forgery in France. English Criminal Law does not constitute such crime a forgery. Review of conduct of Colonial authorities. Friendly representations should be made to French Government to obtain his restoration	44
77	Nov. 9,	Law Officers	Case of Lamirande. Suggest nature of communication to be made to the French Government regarding his illegal surrender	45
78	14,	Solicitor-Gen. and Queen's Advocate	Case of Lamirande. As to release of Lamirande under a writ of habeas corpus on his passage through England to Canada, should French Government consent to his transfer to that country	46
79	14,	Solicitor-Gen. and Queen's Advocate	Case of Lamirande. Observations on conduct of Canadian authorities in having surrendered M. Lamirande to French officials for a crime not coming within the terms of the Treaty	47
80	15,	Solicitor-Gen. and Queen's Advocate	Case of Lamirande. Consider grounds upon which the French Government decline to surrender M. Lamirande to British authorities as sufficient, and as not giving any cause of offence to Her Majesty's Government	48
81	16,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Case of M. Lamirande. Definition of the crime of forgery, by the law of England	49
82	19,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Case of M. Lamirande. The crime of falsifying by Lamirande of the books and bordereau or ledgers of the Bank of France, entrusted to and kept by him, would not be forgery according to the law of England	49
83	Dec. 18,	Law Officers	Case of M. Lamirande. Cannot question the legality of his trial before the Cour d'Assises in consequence of his illegal surrender, as such plea would not be admitted by the Courts of this country. Neither the trial nor sentence upon Lamirande calls for any remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government	50
84	28,	Solicitor-General	Case of Lamirande. Requesting certain documents to assist in advising upon subject	50

GENERAL.

85	Feb. 8,	Law Officers	Objections to proposed Bill, declaring pirates all vessels carrying on Slave Trade, when not justly entitled to claim the protection of the flag of any State or nation	51
86	Mar. 20,	Law Officers	Foreign Enlistment Act. Opinion with regard to the Board of Customs reporting, during time of war between foreign countries in amity with Her Majesty, on the construction of vessels likely to be employed in contravention of the above Act	52
87	June 21,	Law Officers	Approving letter to public Departments on subject of neutrality during the war which has broken out in Europe. Forwarding draft of a Proclamation to be inserted in "London Gazette"	52

1866

GERMANY.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
88	Jan. 19, 1866	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. C. Dodgshun. His claim to the interference of Her Majesty's Government, he being born in Hamburgh of a British father who had become a burgher of that city, to protect his property against confiscation on his refusing to enter the military service. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere. Refers to Report on case of Bosdet on the 22nd September, 1863 (see Law Officers' Reports, vol. iii, page 259)	53
89	June 9,	Queen's Advocate	Transit of goods ordered by British subjects of Austrian merchants by railways through Germany during hostilities. British Consul at Vienna may give certificates that such goods are the property of British subjects, but such certificates will not bind Her Majesty's Government to interfere on behalf of the owner with any foreign Government	53
90	July 28,	Law Officers ..	Privileges of neutrals during hostilities. British merchants residing at Frankfort. The subject of a neutral Power residing in a country during a time of war is subject to the inconveniences arising from a state of war. Option generally given to neutrals to quit a town when likely to become the scene of warlike operations	53

GREECE.

91	Jan. 6,	Law Officers ..	Seizure of Mr. Coore, and plunder of his yacht by brigands at Dragomestre. Approving instructions to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens	55
92	8,	Law Officers ..	British judgments in Ionian suits previous to cession of Ionian Islands to Greece. Instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, on refusal of the Greek Government to conclude a Convention on subject of these suits	55
93	Feb. 6,	Law Officers ..	Ionian pensions. Are of opinion that the XIth Article of the Convention for the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece was not intended to deprive holders of pensions, accepting office under Her Majesty, of such pensions, excepting during the period of retaining such offices. Want of clearness in wording of Article	56
94	6,	Law Officers ..	British judgments in Ionian suits. Her Majesty's Government should not admit right claimed by Greek authorities, to jurisdiction for their Courts to review upon appeal the judgments of the British Consular Courts in the Levant, except in cases in which both the parties to such judgments have become subject, by reason of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, to Hellenic jurisdiction. Case of Rodocanachi v. Verissi	56
95	May 15,	Law Officers ..	British judgments in Ionian suits. Convention. Case of Rodocanachi and Kipula. Her Majesty's Government should not admit right of any Hellenic Court to assume jurisdiction	57
96	July 6,	Law Officers ..	British judgments in Ionian suits. Case of Copello and Rodocanachi v. Verissi. Her Majesty's Government should decline all responsibility on account of these claims. Effect of cession of Ionian Islands on such claims. Cases in which Her Majesty's Government might be called upon to interfere	58
97	Nov. 12,	Law Officers ..	Liability of British subjects, domiciled in Ionian Islands, to conscription. Consider that it would be a just concession on the part of the Greek Government to allow British subjects, naturalized in the Ionian Islands, to resume their British nationality. Her Majesty's Government cannot demand such concession	59

105	Apr. 24,	Queen's Advocate	Case of M. R. Messina. Claims protection as a naturalized British subject. Should be informed that his rights as a naturalized British subject do not extend to the country of his birth. An exception to this rule to be found in cases in which the country of the original allegiance allows their subjects to put off their allegiance	64
106	May 12,	Law Officers ..	Marriages of foreigners in the Italian dominions. No objection to adopting form of certificate proposed by Italian Government	64
107	June 12,	Law Officers ..	Question of treatment of certain classes of vessels in British ports in the event of war in which Italy would be a belligerent, and also with regard to the docking of belligerent vessels at Malta. 1st. Ships built in England and afterwards commissioned by a foreign Government would be treated in any British port as a ship of war belonging to a belligerent. 2ndly. Ships of war built and paid for by a foreign Government, but which have not left the ports of this country, should be allowed to depart, provided it can be proved that such vessels were not built to carry on hostilities against any particular Power. 3rdly. Ships in course of construction should not be allowed to be fitted out and equipped, and if continued should not be allowed to quit this country. Further instructions should be issued by the Admiralty on the subject of the docking of Austrian or Italian ships at Malta.	65
108	14,	Law Officers ..	Consider that British subjects, under the XVth Article of the Treaty of Commerce of 1863, should be exempt from being called upon to billet or lodge soldiers	65

164	18,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Constancia." Capture under Chilean flag, but stated to be the property of Mr. Alwyn, a British subject. Instructions to be sent to Madrid	102
165	19,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on reply of Spanish Government to representations of that of Her Majesty with regard to the establishment of a Prize Court by Admiral Pareja on board his flag-ship. Competence of a State to appoint a military or naval officer a Judge of a Prize Court, provided that he possesses the adequate knowledge of international jurisprudence. Demands of Prussia in 1753	102
165 A	24,	Law Officers	Vessels supposed to be fitting out at Liverpool to act as privateers in war between Spain and Chile. Not sufficient evidence to cause interference of Her Majesty's Government (Appendix.)	202
166	26,	Law Officers	Application of Spanish Minister for detention of certain vessels supposed to be fitting out in England as privateers against Spain. Case of the "Independencia." Insufficiency of evidence	104
167	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Pampero" or "Tornado." Supposed to be fitting out as a privateer for Chilean service. No ground for interference of Her Majesty's Government	104
168	27,	Law Officers	Application of Messrs. Thompson, Bonar, and Co., for protection for the export of guano by British subjects from the Chincha Islands, in the event of war between Spain and Peru. Her Majesty's Government could not interfere by force, but good offices might be used with Spanish Government for protection of property	105
169	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Independencia." Her departure subsequent to the declaration of hostilities between Spain and Peru. Violation of Foreign Enlistment Act. Sufficiency of evidence to justify detention	105
170	30,	Law Officers	Case of the "Independencia." Her status as a Peruvian commissioned ship of war would render her detention by force unadvisable should she return to British territory. Proceedings against such vessel should be initiated by some person being in possession of sufficient evidence, but not by Her Majesty's Government. Observations on the immunity from territorial jurisdiction conceded by international courtesy to foreign ships of war, and as to such immunity being extended to ships built in this country before they had once passed beyond the limits of British jurisdiction	106
171	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Pampero," Chilean privateer. Intention of owners to send over, unarmed, to a foreign market for sale. Concur in opinion expressed by the Lord Advocate of Scotland	107
172	31,	Law Officers	Draft of proclamation of neutrality in the war between Spain and Chile	108
173	Feb. 1,	Attorney- and Solicitor-General	Approving draft of a proposed letter to Public Departments for exclusion from British ports of prizes made by Spanish or Chilean vessels of war, &c.	108

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
174	Feb. 2, 1866	Law Officers	British portion of the crew of the "Huascar," Peruvian ship of war, lying in the harbour of Brest. As to adoption of measures to obtain release of British portion of crew	108
175	14,	Law Officers	Cases of the "General O'Higgins" and "Chucaboca," building in the Thames, supposed to be for the service of Chile. Opinions as to adoption of measures for detention	109
176	15,	Queen's Advocate	Intention of Spanish Government to maintain in certain cases the Prize Courts established by Admiral Pareja on board his flag-ship. The exigencies of the belligerent might, in certain cases of urgency, justify the temporary detention of a neutral ship; but the Spanish Government should be informed that in no case can a British ship be condemned, &c., without the sentence of a regular tribunal	109
177	22,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Tornado" and "Cyclone," and vessels supposed to be building at Blackwall for Chile. Approving course pursued with regard to the two former vessels. Her Majesty's Government should adopt the argument of the Crown in the case of the "Alexandra," and not as laid down by Chief Baron Pollock and Baron Bramwell	110
178	24,	Law Officers	Vessels of war constructing in Great Britain both for the service of Chile and of Spain. Insufficiency of evidence to justify their detention. Suggests communication to the Minister of each of the belligerent nations, of the information received, and whether it is correct	111
179	28,	Law Officers	Cases of the "General O'Higgins," "Chucaboca," "Arapiles," and "Victoria," and also of the "Cyprus" and "Ironsides," building for Chilean service. Their detention. Insufficiency of evidence with regard to the "Ironsides"	111
179 A	28,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Wiggins to be lessee of Cay Sal (Appendix.)	202
180	Mar. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Prize Courts established on board Spanish flag-ship on coast of Chile. Explanation of Spanish Government. Not necessary to send instructions to Sir J. Crampton at present	112
181	17,	Law Officers	Case of the "General O'Higgins" and "Chucaboca." The avowal of Chilean Minister at this Court that the above vessels were intended for the service of his Government is sufficient evidence for their detention	112
182	20,	Law Officers	Cases of the "General O'Higgins" and "Chucaboca." The admission of the Chilean Minister that they were for the service of his Government is sufficient for their detention, but seizure under the Foreign Enlistment Act is rendered unnecessary by his promise that they should not leave the Thames without the permission of Her Majesty's Government	113
183	21,	Law Officers	Treatment of Chilean privateers as pirates. Observations on the arguments of the Spanish Government in favour of such course. Opinion that it is not competent for Spain in her war with Chile to treat any duly commissioned privateers as pirates	113
184	Apr. 16,	Law Officers	Surrender of foreign Diplomatic Agents on board British mail-packets when demanded by foreign authorities. Case of M. Sanguirico, a Spanish Diplomatic Agent conveying despatches to South America. A British mail-packet not exempt from territorial jurisdiction in foreign waters. Her Majesty's Government not responsible to a foreign Government for conduct of captains of such vessels. An injured passenger should seek legal redress	117
184 A	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mermaid." Unsatisfactory reasons assigned by the Spanish Government for refusing to grant compensation or to submit the question to arbitration. Adhere to previous Report on the subject (Appendix.)	203

185	May 4, 1866	Queen's Advocate	Objections raised by authorities at Bilbao to burial of the child of a British subject in cemetery (XXXVth Article of Treaty of 1867). Right of the parents over the body of the child not affected by its baptism by a Spanish priest	118
186	9,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Alice Ward," a Chilean vessel captured near Gibraltar by a Spanish gun-boat. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	119
187	9,	Queen's Advocate	Objections raised by authorities at Bilbao to the burial in the British cemetery of the child of a British subject who had been baptised by a Roman Catholic priest. Law of England with regard to burials	119
188	11,	Law Officers	Iron-clads supposed to be fitting-out in the Thames for the service of the Peruvian Government. Evidence insufficient to justify seizure. Watch should be kept, and inquiries made of Peruvian Minister	120
189	14,	Law Officers	Treatment of property of neutrals on board enemy's ships. Satisfactory termination of correspondence with Spanish Government	120
190	..	Queen's Advocate
191	23,	Queen's Advocate	Further representations should be made to the Spanish Government with regard to the seizure of a Gibraltar vessel by a Spanish cruizer	122
192	31,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "William Anning." Claim on account of detention. Suggests that question should be submitted to the decision of a Spanish merchant and the British Consul	122
193	June 4,	Law Officers	Vessels supposed to be building in the Thames for service of Peruvian Government. Insufficiency of evidence to justify interference of Her Majesty's Government	123
194	20,	Law Officers	Treatment of privateers as pirates. Observations on further arguments of Spanish Government. Incompetency of Spain to declare a duly commissioned privateer a pirate	123
195	27,	Law Officers	Approving proclamations issued by Governor of Hong Kong with regard to Spanish and Chilean cruizers and their prizes calling at that port. No exception should be made in favour of vessels carrying mails	124
195 A	July 4,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mermaid." Refusal of Spanish Government to grant compensation. The cases of the "Rayo," "Prometheo," and "Iris," quoted by the Spanish Government, are insufficient to justify such refusal. Her Majesty's Government should not abandon the position they have taken in this matter (Appendix.)	204
196	Oct. 5,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tornado." Her seizure by Spanish cruizer. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere in existing stage of proceedings	125
197	16,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tornado." Her Majesty's Government cannot complain of resolution of Spanish Government to place the question before the Admiralty Court sitting as a Prize Court. Claim of Messrs. Campbell to indemnification is premature	125
198	30,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tornado." Answer should be returned to the representation of Messrs. Campbell, the owners	126
199	Nov. 9,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tornado." Expedient that Her Majesty's Consul should defer placing the "Tornado" on Consular list of arrivals of British vessels	128
200	24,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Richardson. Assistance should be rendered by Consul at Barcelona to recover a cargo of saltpetre improperly detained by Spanish authorities	128

227	Jan. 6,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Hepworth. Seizure of cotton purchased by neutral merchants for export on the termination of hostilities. Right of a neutral to trade with a belligerent, notwithstanding the assistance rendered by the money derived from such trade	144
228	Jan. 9, 1866	Law Officers	Case of the "Shenandoah." Alleged piracy committed by Captain Waddell by the capture of vessels subsequent to the surrender of General Lee. Observations on the evidence of Temple. Insufficiency of evidence to warrant a prosecution. Such portion of crew as are proved to be British subjects should be prosecuted under the second section of the Foreign Enlistment Act. Opinion on evidence with regard to the armament of the "Shenandoah" previous to her departure from England. Doubt truth of statements respecting the reception of the "Shenandoah" by the Governor, &c., of Victoria	145
229	9,	Law Officers	Case of the "Shenandoah." Observations on Mr. Seward's note of the 30th November, 1865, regarding the conduct of Her Majesty's Government in reference to the "Shenandoah," her officers and crew, on the arrival of that ship at Liverpool. Insufficiency of evidence as to nationality of crew of that vessel. Power of United States' Agents in England to have prosecuted crew, &c., of "Shenandoah" for piracy, had they been provided with sufficient evidence	146
230	10,	Law Officers	Claim of Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe on account of destruction, in South Carolina, of cotton belonging to late Mr. Kay. Case similar to that of Messrs. Aitkin and Rogers, reported upon on the 15th August, 1865. (Law Officers' Reports, vol. v, page 232.)	149
231	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgiana." Claimed by the Government of the United States as having belonged to the so-called Confederate States. Cannot be given up pending legal proceedings in Canada. Claim of the United States' Government confirms previous opinion regarding the existence of a state of public war	149
232	18,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Vernon. Claim on account of imprisonment and loss of property in United States. Adhere to their previous Report of the 25th July, 1863. (Law Officers' Reports, vol. iii, page 216.)	150
233	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "St. Mary." Approving conduct of Governor Eyre	150
234	Feb. 3,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dashing Wave." Approving proposed answer to Messrs. Dean and Co.	151
235	3,	Law Officers	Case of John Scullen. Approving refusal of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Cygnet" to surrender John Scullen, who had delivered himself up as a deserter from Her Majesty's Service, whilst serving on board an American merchant-vessel	151
236	3,	Law Officers	Case of Messrs. Gibbs and Co. Seizure of cotton, purchased for British subjects by Agents of the so-called Confederate States during the Civil War, not justifiable, and contrary to all principles of jurisprudence either public or private. Her Majesty's Government should officially remonstrate	152
237	12,	Queen's Advocate	Act 15 & 16 Vict., cap. 26, does not extend to the recovery of deserters from vessels of war	152
238	14,	Law Officers	Approving proposed draft of instructions to Sir F. Bruce, relative to embargo on cotton purchased by Messrs. Gibbs and Co., for certain English houses	153
239	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Shenandoah." The untrustworthy evidence of the seaman Temple would not justify a prosecution	153

242	Mar. 6, 1866	Law Officers ..	Ireland. Interference of the United States' Consul in Dublin, with regard to the arrest of certain reported American citizens. Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize any title in a foreign Power to interfere on behalf of natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, naturalized in a foreign country. Due attention, however, should be paid to any evidence causing doubts as to such persons being natural-born subjects of Her Majesty. Course to be followed should be similar to that followed by the Government of the United States during civil war	155
243	6,	Attorney-General	Foreign Enlistment Act. Debate in House of Commons relative to proposed amendments in the Acts of Great Britain and United States. Observations on the proposals of the United States' Government	155
244	9,	Law Officers ..	Ireland. Fenian arrests. Claim of American Minister to interfere in favour of American-born citizens. Her Majesty's Government cannot acknowledge any right on the part of a foreign Power to interfere on behalf of natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, on the ground of their being entitled to rights of citizenship as having been naturalized in a foreign country. Attention to be paid to any representations or evidence in favour of persons in custody not being natural-born subjects of Her Majesty	158
245	10,	Law Officers ..	Claim of Mr. O'Connor. Destruction of tobacco at Richmond during civil war. Her Majesty's Government cannot hold the United States' Government responsible for such loss ..	160

Bruce and Governor Rawson, on the subject of the sale to British subjects, of vessels formerly the property of citizens of the so-called Confederate States, and subsequent grant of British register. Case of the "Wren." Refers to previous Reports in 1865, in case of the "Kate Gregg." (See Reports, 1865, pp. 259 and 261)	160
247	16,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion relative to grant of assistance to arrest deserters from ships of war. Bahama Acts of 1833 and 1865. Adhere to former opinion that above Acts apply to merchant-vessels only	161
248	21,	Attorney-General	Observations on statements made by Mr. Adams, regarding proposals for amending the Foreign Enlistment Acts of Great Britain and United States. Debate in House of Commons	161
249	28,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Opinion on further correspondence between the Foreign Office and Home Office respecting the possibility of obtaining evidence against officers and crew of the "Shenandoah." Untrustworthy character of Temple's evidence. The matter should be allowed to drop.	162
250	Apr. 9,	Law Officers ..	Debt due to heirs of late Mr. D. Cameron. Question of payment in the depreciated currency of the United States. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, but the claimants must have recourse to the Law Courts of United States, and be considered as entitled only to the same amount of justice as native subjects	163
251	10,	Law Officers ..	Case of Messrs. Duck Brothers and Co. Pillage of Bagdad, Mexico, by United States subjects. Claim to indemnification for loss of property. Claimants should apply to United States' Government, but they should not rely upon the exertions of Her Majesty's Government, it being the duty of the Mexican Government to take measures to obtain indemnification	163
252	30,	Queen's Advocate	Canada. Act of Legislature regarding the fisheries. No objection to confirmation by Her Majesty's Government ..	164
253	May 11,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mrs. Molyneux. Refer to previous Reports. (See Law Officers' Reports, 1865, pages 224, 240.) Claim on account of destruction of property during civil war. Her Majesty's Government can only recommend her claim to the favourable consideration of United States' Government ..	164
254	May 14, 1866	Law Officers ..	Seizure of British cotton during civil war. Approving opinions expressed on the subject by Messrs. O'Connor, Evarts, Pierrepont, and Brady, of the New York bar	165
255	June 7,	Law Officers ..	Claims of British subjects on account of losses during civil war. Opinion of United States' Judge Advocate-General. British subjects, resident and possessing landed property in the United States, cannot, generally speaking, claim to be placed on a better footing, with respect to compensation, than native citizens	165
256	20,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. W. H. Stewart. Claim on account of losses during civil war. Is entitled to same remedies, as regards compensation, as American citizens who continued to reside in the Confederate States during the civil war, but remained loyal to the Government of the United States	166
257	27,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. A. Barclay. Claim on account of losses during civil war. Refer to previous Report of July 5, 1865. Her Majesty's Government cannot press claim	166
258	28,	Law Officers ..	Case of D. Mc Sweeney, a citizen of the United States. Complains of being illegally imprisoned in Ceylon. Opinion that he was legally imprisoned	167
259	28,	Queen's Advocate	Claims of Mr. J. A. Machado and Mr. F. J. Medeiros on Her Majesty's Government, on account of the detention in 1854 and 1857, by the British authorities on the African coast, of the American vessels "Mary Varney" and "Thomas Watson" suspected of Slave Trade	167
260	July 2,	Law Officers ..	Claim of Messrs. Cheetham and Son on the United States' Government on account of losses during civil war. Messrs. Cheetham must seek the same redress as United States' citizens similarly situated	169
261	Aug. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Claim to compensation of a British coloured subject named Edwards, for having been detained in slavery for three years by United States' citizens. Cannot demand compensation, the United States' Government not being responsible for an illegal act committed without their sanction in a foreign country	170
262	7,	Law Officers ..	Claim of Mr. W. H. Stewart. Adhere to former opinion that Mr. Stewart's claim must be considered on same footing as claims of United States' citizens	170

280	May 17,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. H. R. Hartman. Concurs in Mr. Edwardes' Report with regard to reduction in amount of claim. Suggests answer to Mr. Hartman	180
281	July 9,	Queen's Advocate	Claims of bondholders. Opinion that seizure of Customhouses on behalf of creditors would be an act of hostility. Their administration by British authority, at request of Venezuelan Government, would not be contrary to international law, but a question of expediency	182
282	19,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Captain Matthews. Captain Matthews should be informed that Her Majesty's Government cannot further interfere in his case	182
283	Dec. 13,	Law Officers	Case of the "Bolivar." Property of Government of Venezuela. Her seizure by crew engaged to navigate her to Venezuela, by whom she was brought to England. Her Majesty's Government would have been justified in detaining her, had she put into a British port, as an armed vessel sailing without a lawful commission or lawful flag, but should have allowed the Venezuelan Government to take possession of her by any legal means. Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere with her crew on behalf of the Venezuelan Government. Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in seizing the vessel as an instalment of a debt due by the Venezuelan Government to British subjects	183

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received April 25.)

Doctors' Commons, April 24, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed letter from the Board of Admiralty, containing a copy of a despatch from Commodore Hornby, dated the 12th instant, reporting the capture of Manuel Vacca, a native Chief, and notorious pirate in the Congo River, by Her Majesty's ship "Jaseur," in the month of November last, and requesting to be allowed to detain him for the present at Ascension or Sierra Leone; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the legality of the course of proceeding recommended by Commodore Hornby.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the capture and detention of Vacca may not unreasonably be regarded in one point of view as a measure of self-defence. But unless England is to be considered as at war with the tribe of which this man was Chief, or unless he be treated as a pirate, I am afraid that his detention cannot be justified upon strictly legal grounds. In the former case, which would be attended with by far the least practical difficulty, he may be treated as a prisoner of war; in the latter case he ought, strictly speaking, to be tried for piracy.

Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Venice (No. 7), and to request that I would furnish your Lordship at my earliest conveuience with my opinion on the point submitted in it, as to the state of international law with regard to the question of the sale to neutrals, previous to the breaking out of hostilities, of vessels belonging to belligerents.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the general international law on this subject, as carefully expounded by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council during the last (Russian) war, is to this effect; that a complete, absolute, bonâ fide sale of a ship, imminente bello, by an owner, the subject of a State which is about to become, and does become, a belligerent, to a purchaser, the subject of a State which is about to become, and does become, a neutral, is lawful and valid. The sale must not, however, be in any sense collusive or fraudulent; the transfer must not be conditional but entire; the former owner must be divested of the property, the interest in the management, the employment, the direction of the vessel. I am not aware of any Treaty upon this subject.

I have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna, and a letter from the Austrian Ambassador at this Court, severally inclosing a notice published by the Austrian Government, and purporting to be issued with reference to the Declaration of Paris, by which the Austrian Government declares its intention to renounce the capture of merchant-ships belonging to an enemy, provided that enemy reciprocally renounces the capture of Austrian merchant-ships.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, by a Memorandum which the Austrian Ambassador has placed in your Lordship's hands, and which was also inclosed, it is requested that the British Government will endeavour to obtain a reciprocal engagement from the Italian Government, and Mr. Hammond was therefore pleased to request that we would consider these papers at our earliest convenience, and report our opinion, 1st, as to the Austrian Declaration; 2ndly, as to the bearing on it of the Declaration of Paris; and, 3rdly, as to the expediency of Her Majesty's Government making any such communication to the Italian Government as is requested by the Austrian Ambassador.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That with respect to the Declaration itself, we have only to observe that it is of course competent for any belligerent Power to renounce, for itself, upon such terms as it may think fit to declare, the exercise of any belligerent right competent to it by the law of nations in time of war. This Austrian Declaration proposes to renounce (provided the other Power or Powers with whom Austria may be at war will do the like) one of the most unquestionable belligerent rights of nations. It may be presumed that the motive for such renunciation may be that the exercise of this right would not be likely, in the particular circumstances of the Austrian Empire, to prove so useful to Austria as to her enemies, during the anticipated war. But in this question neutral nations have no interest, except so far as they may profit by the increased immunity of their commerce from the ordinary risks of war, if the other belligerents should follow, in this respect, the invitation and example of Austria.

2. The Declaration of Paris does not, directly or indirectly, involve the principle of this Austrian Declaration; nor has it (that we can see) any legitimate bearing thereon.

3. It will be for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether it is expedient for Great Britain now to hold out to other European States the expectation that in any future wars in which this country may be engaged, we should be disposed to renounce the right of capturing merchant-vessels, on terms of reciprocity such as those proposed by Austria. Unless Her Majesty's Government should think this course proper and expedient, we cannot advise them to interpose so far even as to use their good offices with the Italian Government for the purpose of inducing that Government to accept the Austrian proposal.

Lincoln's Inn, June 29, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying note from the Austrian Ambassador at this Court, claiming the interference of Her Majesty's Government to prevent the exportation from North Shields, on board the steamer "Edith Owen," of a cargo of Armstrong guns and ammunition, said to have been shipped for an unknown destination, and to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the course that should be taken with reference to this communication.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that no ground is shown for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. If these cannons are intended for the service of a belligerent, they will be liable to be seized as contraband on the high seas; but the proclamation of neutrality would not warrant Her Majesty's Government in preventing their exportation from this country, the "Edith Owen" being (as we assume) a merchant-vessel, and not a ship fitted out or designed for warlike purposes.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 23rd day of July ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna (No. 9), inclosing a Decree which has been issued by the Austrian Government respecting the treatment of hostile and suspended merchant-vessels during the continuance of hostilities at sea; and he had to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to make on this document.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Decree in question does not appear to us to call for any particular observations. The regulations are generally very favourable to the neutral.

We assume, of course, that "the examination" spoken of, letter E, paragraph V, will be properly conducted before a regular Prize Court.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 7, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a correspondence which has passed between Her Majesty's Consul at Sarawak, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Hamburgh, and the Foreign Office, on the subject of the capture by pirates, and the rescue by a Hamburgh steamer, of the British ship "Ruby;" and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Syndic of Hamburgh does not mention whether the "Ruby" appeared to have been pillaged or not; if the latter were the case, it would be rather difficult to give entire credence to the story of the captain and crew; but I presume that the vessel did bear evident marks of having been plundered. In this case the circumstances afford a strong ground, in addition to many it is to be feared already existing of the same character, why an application should be made to the Chinese Government to enter into some arrangements such as it appears have been procured by the Netherlands Government, by which greater security against the recurrence of these piratical acts can be obtained on behalf of British merchantmen. And, at all events, the necessity for more gun-boats in these seas appears to be demonstrated by the statement of Her Majesty's Consul-General at Sarawak.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio (No. 6) relative to a complaint made by certain British merchants against a recent alteration in the Brazilian Tariff with regard to printed cotton goods; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Her Majesty's Minister on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree in the view taken of this case by Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro. I think the British merchants improperly evaded the law of the Brazilian Tariff passed in January 1861. I think the Order of October 1862, with respect to these remnants ("retalhos"), was the fair interpretation of the Tariff. And I am of opinion that these gentlemen are not entitled to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government or Representative at Rio on their behalf with the Brazilian Government in this matter.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro (No. 39, April 5), inclosing a correspondence which had passed between the Spanish Minister in Brazil and himself relative to the application made to him by the former to take measures for the removal of British seamen from on board the Peruvian vessels of war "Independencia" and "Huascar;" and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration at our earliest convenience, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Thornton thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 12, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 24th of February last as to the steps which might be taken for removing from the Peruvian ships of war "Independencia" and "Huascar," in the event of their putting into an English port, any British seamen who might be serving on board those vessels, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty inclosing copies of a correspondence between Her Majesty's Consul and the Spanish Minister at Rio de Janeiro on the subject of the application made by the latter to Mr. Thornton for the removal of British seamen from on board those vessels, and requesting to be informed what instructions should be given to officers of Her Majesty's ships on foreign stations for their guidance in the event of their falling in with such ships having British subjects on board. That the correspondence between Mr. Thornton and Her Majesty's Ministers at Rio had already been submitted to me; and he (Mr. Hammond) was pleased to request that I would take the Admiralty letters into consideration, and inform your Lordship what reply should, in my opinion, be given to their inquiry relative to the instructions which should be issued in the matter to naval officers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Thornton has taken a correct view of his duty and authority in declining to comply with the Spanish Minister's request. That it appears to me that the only instructions which should be given to officers in command of Her Majesty's ships on foreign stations as to British subjects serving on board foreign ships contrary to the Proclamation, is, that it is not within the scope of their general duty to exercise any authority over such vessels or such persons.

Doctors' Commons, April 7, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying Memorandum from Mr. Robert Stewart, setting forth the circumstances under which his brother Mr. George D. Stewart was thrown into prison at Buenos Ayres; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion, if possible, by this morning (as the mails are dispatched to the River Plate in the evening) as to the instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the present imperfect representation of facts it is impossible to do more than send instructions to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres to take such steps on behalf of Mr. Stewart as in the exercise of a sound discretion may appear to him necessary and proper for the due protection of this person, and to report to Her Majesty's Government without delay upon the true state of facts and circumstances of the case.

It should be added that as far as Her Majesty's Government are able to form any opinion on this matter, it would appear that the Government of Buenos Ayres have indirectly procured the imprisonment of Mr. Stewart for debt, at the same time that by laying an embargo upon his property they have deprived him of the means of discharging the debt. But that this opinion is founded upon a statement, as yet uncorroborated, of Mr. Stewart's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 2nd December last, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres (No. 12, February 22), reporting a conversation which he had had with the Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs, in regard to the Law recently passed for the administration of intestate estates in that Republic; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion, having regard to the circumstances stated by Mr. Ford, that the best course to adopt would be that which Mr. Ford refers to as having been suggested by Earl Russell in his despatch of the 2nd April, 1863, namely, "to avoid as far as possible raising questions on a subject on which the wording of the Treaty of 1825 may be variously interpreted; and to act as may be thought necessary in each case which may arise." It is impossible to gainsay the abstract right of the Argentine Republic to pass the law in question.

Doctors' Commons, April 24, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 9th instant in regard to the circumstances under which Mr. George D. Stewart was thrown into prison at Buenos Ayres, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter dated the 19th instant, with its inclosures, from that gentleman's brother upon this subject, in which he requests that Her Majesty's Representative at Buenos Ayres may be instructed to obtain pecuniary compensation from the Argentine Government for the losses sustained by his brother; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the nature of the instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in the matter. The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in this letter of Mr. Stewart to his brother, I do not find any positive evidence of the complicity of the Government of Buenos Ayres in the imprisonment of Mr. Stewart—an offence of which it was suggested, in the last communication to the Foreign Office, that this Government was guilty. The imprisonment appears to have been caused by the agents of the captains of the vessel demanding freight for the "Yerba;" it may be that they were instigated by the Government, but there is, at present, no adequate proof of it. It appears that this Government were willing to yield possession of the "Yerba" to Mr. Stewart on his giving security that it did not belong to the Government of their eneny, from whose country it had been exported. This security Mr. Stewart could or would not furnish, and the "Yerba" remains embargoed. If the proof offered by Mr. Stewart of his ownership of the "Yerba" be, as he alleges, sufficient according to the law of Buenos Ayres, then the continued embargo is certainly an injury inflicted upon Mr. Stewart, and in any event there ought to be a reasonable period within which a decision upon the subject should be made. With respect to the imprisonment of Mr. Stewart at all (much more, of course, in a criminal jail, though only for a short time), it appears to have been unwarrantable, and, if the decision of the Judge at Buenos Ayres be correctly stated, to give Mr. Stewart a title to damages against those, whoever they were, who caused that imprisonment.

Mr. Stewart now seeks for compensation from the Government of Buenos Ayres on account both of the personal and pecuniary injury done to him. I am clearly of opinion that your Lordship should not make this demand on behalf of Mr. Stewart without a further communication upon the matter from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, to whom the letter of Mr. Stewart, the claimant, should be sent. But, at the same time, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires might be instructed that, in the event of his agreeing with the view taken by Mr. Stewart, he should press for the immediate release of the "Yerba" from embargo; if this cannot be obtained, that a reasonable period should be fixed within which the question of ownership should be decided: and further, if he be satisfied that there is adequate ground for charging this Government with having caused the imprisonment of Mr. Stewart for not paying the freight which by their embargo they practically prevented him from paying, and which they would not pay themselves, then to intimate to the Government that he shall refer the question to Her Majesty's Govern-

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres (Nos. 59 and 60), relating to the liability of British subjects established in or trading at that place, to obey the Decree of the Argentine Government, by which horses, mules, and ships are compulsorily required for military service.

And Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether exemption from the operation of such Decrees can be claimed in favour of British subjects under the Treaty of February 2, 1825, or on any other ground.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that exemption from the operation of these Decrees in favour of British subjects can be claimed under the 9th section of the Treaty of Buenos Ayres of February 2, 1825, by the terms of which it is provided that British subjects "shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether by sea or by land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions."

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 29th March, 1865, on the subject of the grant made to Messrs. Vaughan and Co. by the Nicaraguan Government to cut and export mahogany from a district within the territory reserved to the Mosquito Indians by the Treaty of Managua of January 28, 1860, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Greytown (No. 13, November 20, 1865), inclosing a copy of a letter from the Government of the Mosquito Indians to Messrs. Vaughan and Co., in which they claim the sole right of making such grants; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, together with the previous correspondence, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the question as it now stands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the evidence now before me, to the claim of the Mosquito Indian Government, and more especially to the information given to Mr. Green by Her Majesty's Government, March 12, 1862, founded, it appears, upon the opinion of my predecessor in office, that the absolute ownership of this territory was in the Mosquito Indians, carrying with it the right to cut timber and the like, I am of opinion that Messrs. Vaughan should be apprised by your Lordship that the grant of the Nicaraguan Government to them must be considered as invalid, unless they can obtain the sanction of the Government of the Mosquito Indians, confirming the said grant.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches as marked in the margin,* relative to a claim for compensation which has been made upon the Nicaraguan Government by Her Majesty's Consul at Greytown, in behalf of Thomas Williams, a British subject, in consequence of the ill-treatment he received at the hands of an officer in the Nicaraguan Service, while serving as cook on board an American steamer; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister in Central America upon the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the despatch from the Foreign Office, dated January 28, 1865, that Her Majesty's Government have approved of the demand for redress made by Mr. Fraser to the Nicaraguan Government on behalf of Thomas Williams.

The outrage, if correctly stated in these papers, was a very gross one. A British subject, without trial or inquiry, was subjected to violent corporal punishment by the order of the Nicaraguan Commander of Fort St. Carlos on the San Juan River at the request of the captain of an American merchant-steamer

The answer of the Nicaraguan Government, through Don Pedro Zeledon, is not a denial of the outrage, but an averment that the officer who inflicted it has ceased to be in command of Fort St. Carlos, and that the Courts of Law are open to Williams for redress.

This answer has been twice made, once to Mr. Consul Green, August 9, 1864; a second time to Mr. Consul Paton, June 14, 1865.

The above-mentioned despatch approving the demand for redress was written after the answer to Mr. Green had been received at the Foreign Office.

It does not appear to me now, as it did not appear before to Her Majesty's Government, to be satisfactory; the outrage was committed by the officer of a fort of the Venezuelan Government, and by him acting in this capacity. For his acts, so far as they affect foreign subjects, they are responsible to foreign States; they do not escape from the responsibility by saying that he is not now an officer of this fort.

It seems to me that the instructions to be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister in Central America should be, that Her Majesty's Government cannot accept, for the reason which I have stated, the answer of the Nicaraguan Government, and that they must require a proper indemnity to be paid to the British subject who has been the sufferer of this apparently undefended and indefensible outrage.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 28.)

Doctors' Commons, May 26, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 10th instant, from the official assignee to the estate of Mr. Carmichael, relative to certain claims of that gentleman on the Government of Honduras, which the creditors are anxious to have realized.

That this case was referred to the Law Advisers of the Crown in 1856 and 1858: that I should see by the previous correspondence, also inclosed, that in 1859 Her Majesty's Government threatened to employ coercive measures to obtain a settlement of the matter in question; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration with reference to the present state of the case, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to how far the steps already taken by Her Majesty's Government would necessitate or justify coercive measures against the Government of Honduras.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as this claim has been formally pronounced to be valid by Commissioners appointed under Treaty by both Governments, who bound themselves to recognize the validity of the award of the Commissioners, there can be no doubt as to its validity, or as to the liability of the Honduras Government to satisfy it.

The claimant has, however, accepted to take payment in timber, to be delivered on the sea-coast of the Atlantic or elsewhere; but it is now said, on apparently good authority, that this arrangement is, as I understand the case, owing to the circumstances utterly incapable of being executed.

In these circumstances, though I think it would be a severe and inexpedient course to order coercive measures to be taken against this Government, which professes to be, and probably is, insolvent; nevertheless I am of opinion that the Honduras Government should be distinctly apprised that either the agreement with respect to the delivery of the timber must be carried into immediate effect, or that arrangements must be made for paying the debt in money by regular instalments, one of which should be forthwith paid down. This latter course would seem to me most expedient.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received July 11.)

Doctors' Commons, July 10, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Mathew, late Her Majesty's Minister in Central America (No. 18, May 10, 1866), inclosing the reply of the Nicaraguan Government to the representation which, in conformity with my Report of the 23rd December last, he was instructed to address to them respecting the pretension raised by the authorities at Grey Town to levy duties on goods destined to be imported into the Mosquito Reserve, and brought in transit to that port, and also on goods imported directly into the Mosquito Reserve, without passing through Grey Town; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the reply of the Nicaraguan Government into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further steps which should be taken in the matter.

The previous papers on this subject were also inclosed for reference, if necessary.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the contention of the Government of Nicaragua that Her Majesty's Government has no right to interfere on behalf of the Mosquito Indians, because by the Convention of 1860, the British Protectorate of Mosquito territory was finally abandoned, it is to be observed that Her Majesty's Government have hitherto conceived, and, as it appears to me, with justice, that they have a right to secure the execution of the conditions of the Convention, to which Her Majesty was one of the Contracting Parties.

With respect to the construction of that Treaty as to the particular point in question,—the reasoning of Don A. Silva, in his despatch of April 17, 1866, does not satisfy me that the Mosquito Indians are not entitled to impose duties upon merchandize imported into their territory, or that the exercise of this right is inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua; and if this right exists, the Nicaraguan Government cannot be entitled to require payment for a second time of such duties at Grey Town, or upon goods not imported into that port, but merely transhipped thence for the Mosquito territory.

Don Silva defends the act of his Government by referring to the latter part of the VIIth Article of the Treaty; but that relates to "goods destined" (which the goods in question are not) "for consumption within the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—I perceive that I am desired to advise as to "the further steps which should be taken in this matter." I think Mr. Mathew should be directed to apprise the Nicaraguan Government that Her Majesty's Government hold that they are entitled to insist upon * Treaty of Managua; Mr. Green, No. 10, October 28; Mr. Fraser, No. 24, 1864; to Mr. Fraser, No. 1, January 26; Admiralty, February 28; to Admiralty, March 6; Mr. Fraser, November 6; Mr. Paton, No. 12, 1865; to Mr. Mathew, No. 1, 1866.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 13, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires in Central America (No. 18), inclosing a Decree which has been recently published by the Government of Honduras in regard to the interior government of the Bay Islands and the Mosquito Indians and the Mosquito coast; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have considered the two Treaties between Great Britain and Honduras and Nicaragua (28th November, 1859, 28th January, 1860), and I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Wallis that it was not the intention of Her Majesty's Government that the Mosquito Indians should be placed absolutely under the Government of Honduras.

The status of the Mosquito Indians is very peculiar, and I think it would be expedient that Mr. Wallis should be instructed to apprise the Government of Honduras that the Government of Her Majesty consider that, under the Treaties which have been made with the Republics which border on the Mosquito territory, the right of free government, with certain specified restrictions, is secured to the Mosquito Indians, and they therefore hope that no attempt will be made by the Honduras Government to infringe that right.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 16th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 64), on the subject of the capture of the "Mattias Cousino" by the Spanish squadron, together with a letter, dated the 16th November, from Mr. Long, claiming to be owner of the vessel; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any further instructions should be sent to Mr. Thomson on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think it is not necessary to send further instructions on this matter to Mr. Thomson. But I may observe that the provisional certificate of registry does not necessarily prove the nationality of the vessel. It only proves that certain statements were made to the Consul, on the faith of which he granted, as he was bound to do, the certificate. The Consul acts ministerially and not judicially in this matter.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 69), reporting the circumstances of the seizure, by the Spanish blockading squadron, of the ship "Tongoy" sailing under the Chilean flag, but stated to belong to a British subject; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to the instruction which should be sent to Mr. Thomson in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere, officially, on behalf of the owner of the "Tongoy." The grounds stated by Mr. Thomson why, although sailing under a belligerent flag, she should not be condemned as lawful prize, are, though by no means incontrovertible, proper to be stated in the Prize Court. But they cannot be urged upon Admiral Pareja as reasons why the question of her capture should not be submitted to proper judicial examination.

This opinion is of course not to be understood as preventing Mr. Thomson from using any good offices in his power to obtain the release of the vessel.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 9, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 63), together with its inclosures, reporting the circumstances under which application had been made to the Chilean Government by British merchants at Valparaiso, supported by him, for permission to remove their goods from the bonded warehouses in that port, and stating the conditions on which that permission had been granted.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at my earliest convenience with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the circumstances, I do not think the conditions upon which the Chilean Government offered to allow the removal of these goods, which have not paid Custom duties, are such as to found any just complaint on the part of the British merchants.

And I think that Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago should be instructed to apprize these persons that, after the refusal to remove the merchandize under these conditions, they are not to expect that, in the event of any injury accruing to it from the operations of the Spanish belligerent, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to hold the Chilean Government responsible for that injury.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, together with the previous correspondence on the same subject,* in regard to the conduct of the Commander of the Spanish ship of war "Berenguela," in threatening to bombard Coquimbo.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That at present there is not sufficient evidence of what the Captain of the "Berenguela" really did threaten, or as to the circumstances in which the threat was made, to enable me to form a decided opinion upon this subject.

But if the captain of a belligerent ship blockading a port announced that if his ship or her boat was fired at from the shore, he would bombard, in an hour's time, the place from whence the shots were fired, I do not think, as at present advised, that he was guilty of any breach of international law or usage.

The presence of neutrals in a blockaded port or a besieged town cannot avail, and never, I think, has been allowed by British military or naval force to prevent a necessary operation of military force.

It is to be observed also, that the notice is practically more than an hour's notice to the neutral, because the notice is given before the act has taken place, after which the hour's interval is to elapse; and it would then rather seem to become a question between the neutral and the authorities of the blockaded port.

It is for the neutral, by application to these authorities, to prevent, if possible, the act which is to cause the bombardment of the town, and if this should be impracticable, to obtain a promise from them that the act shall not take place till the neutral has withdrawn from the port.

Rose, Innes and Co., a British firm at Valparaiso; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in any case Messrs. Rose and Co. are entitled to the adjudication of a Prize Court on their claim; but I doubt very much whether they would derive any benefit from it.

Gunpowder is certainly, primâ facie, contraband, and its seizure might be justified, although the blockade of the port to which it was destined was not known at the time of its shipment. It would be a different question if, at this time, the breaking out of the war had not been known; for then, as the question of contraband depends partly upon the destination of the article, the Prize Court might listen to the argument that the gunpowder was bonâ fide destined for blasting, that is, for civil, not military purposes.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith, for our immediate opinion as to the course which should be pursued, a letter from the Home Office respecting a vessel fitting out in the river, supposed to be for the service of the Chilean Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is embarrassing to have to advise Her Majesty's Government in a case of this kind without evidence in the form of depositions, showing an illegal destination. But if the Commissioners of Customs believe, from the information which has reached them, that this vessel is in fact intended for the service of the Chilean Government, we think that her armament and equipment in a manner contrary to the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act (assuming such to have been her destination) is so patent as to make it the duty of Her Majesty's Government to prevent her from going to sea.

Notice, therefore, should, in our opinion, be given to the person in whose possession she now is, that she will be seized if she attempts to leave the docks; and at the same time every effort should be made, without delay, to obtain depositions on which an actual seizure may safely be founded.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Messrs. Uhthoff and Co. say, that they address your Lordship because "we wish to have the highest authority for guiding us in our business transactions." I think that an answer to the following effect should be sent to these gentlemen; that they would act wisely in being guided by the opinion of their proper professional adviser in this matter, with respect to which Her Majesty's Government must wholly decline taking any responsibility upon themselves.

That lead is an article of an ambiguous character and doubtful use; and the question whether a cargo of it would, or would not, be deemed contraband, would depend mainly upon all the circumstances of the case, showing a bonâ fide destination of the cargo to a neutral or a belligerent port.

That with respect to the other question in the letter, Her Majesty's Government "have not received any communication from the Chilean Government bearing upon this subject."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is true that Lord Stowell was inclined to hold that in cases of contraband, an entirely past transaction wholly unconnected with the voyage on which the vessel was seized, would not enure to the condemnation of the vessel; and to that doctrine I suppose Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Chile refers.

It does not, however, appear to me to be applicable to the circumstances of this case, so far as I can collect them from the papers before me. The ship has been set free, and I do not think that any further interference in this matter, on the part of Her Majesty's Representative at Chile, is necessary.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 24), reporting that on raising the blockade of the port of Caldera, the Spanish Commander-in-Chief had set-fire to certain prizes in his possession; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the legality of this transaction.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the principles and rules of international law, it is competent to a belligerent captor to destroy prizes if the necessity of the case really compels him to do so. But the Government of the captor cannot, by this act of their officer, escape from their obligations to the neutral owner. He is entitled either to obtain immediate compensation for his loss, or to every facility for establishing his claim to compensation before a proper Prize Court: and it must be conceded to him that every defect of evidence which may ensue from the act of the captor must enure to his, and not to the owner's detriment.

It is a matter, of course, for the discretion of the owner whether, if he have reason to know that his vessel was on any account liable to be condemned as prize, he will undertake this trouble and expense, necessarily incident to a trial, even if the captor should be condemned in costs and damages; which condemnation, moreover, would not be part of the sentence unless it were proved that there was no probable ground of seizure.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (Nos. 21 and 25), relative to a declaration which had been issued by the Commander-in-chief of the Spanish naval forces off the coast of Chile, that Chilean coal would be considered as contraband of war. A despatch with its inclosures which has been received from Her Majesty's Consul at Valparaiso upon the same subject, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these despatches into consideration, and that, with reference to the course pursued by England during the war with Russia, I would report to your Lordship my opinion on the facts stated in the inclosed despatches, and on the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Commander Mendez Nunez to the protest from the Consul of the United States of North America (Inclosure 6 in Consul Rouse's despatch No. 3 of February 16, 1866), contains a fair exposition of the principles of international law applicable to this question.

1. His first position is correct, namely, that neutral merchants resident in a belligerent kingdom after war has been declared and carried on, are liable to be treated, so far as their property at sea is concerned, as enemies.

2. His second position is also correct,—that it is competent to him to declare coal, from the present circumstances of the war, to be contraband. Coal is as necessary as gunpowder to privateer steamers, and, according to all reason and authority, the question whether a particular article be or be not contraband, must be materially affected by the consideration of its subservience to military uses at the place and in the circumstances in which it is captured. It is true that coal put on board neutral vessels sailing for an innocent destination, previously to the issue of this order of the Spanish Admiral, would not be liable to condemnation. It may also be contended that coal on board neutral vessels, that is, vessels not connected with any mercantile house in the belligerent country, with an unquestionable neutral destination, would be entitled to favourable consideration at the hands of the captor; but if the vessel were seized in a place convenient for the adverse belligerent, it would be extremely difficult to prove any such destination, whatever paper might be on board.

I find no Order in Council declaring coals to be contraband, but I do find that during the French and Austrian war in 1859, coals were forbidden to be exported from this country, which was then neutral; and I think that on this account, as well as for the reasons which I have already alleged, Her Majesty's Government ought not to complain of this declaration made by the Spanish Admiral.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, relative to the detention of the British brig "Dolphin" by the Spanish Commander-in-chief at Valparaiso. A despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Valparaiso upon the same subject was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the Spanish Commander-in-chief has not exceeded his belligerent rights in detaining, as the facts are stated, this vessel. The suspicions of her being destined to supply the enemy with coal, expressed in the letter of Commodore Nunez to Commodore Harvey, may, or may not, be well founded, but certainly they are not altogether unreasonable; and the conduct of the gentleman acting as attorney for the owner of the brig in refusing to furnish the evidence of her innocence suggested to him by Mr. Consul Rouse, appears to proceed either from very bad judgment, or from a knowledge that the suspicions of the Spanish Admiral are well founded. The owner of the "Dolphin," of course, has a right to the sentence of a proper Prize Court upon his claim, but I do not think that the case is one which at present requires the intervention of Her Majesty's Govdrnment.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, together with one which your Lordship addressed to Mr. Thomson, respecting the torpedoes which it was reported were to be employed by the Chilean Government against the Spanish vessels blockading the city of Valparaiso. That I should perceive that in his despatch No. 26, Mr. Thomson reports that the Spanish Commander-in-chief had declared that in the event of any torpedo being used against his squadron he would at once bombard that place; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the course which the Spanish Commander-in-chief declared he would pursue, would be justifiable if resorted to.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that the next West India mail will be despatched on the evening of the 16th instant, and that your Lordship would be glad to receive my report in time to enable your Lordship to reply to Mr. Thomson by that mail.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the course which the Spanish Commander-in-chief has declared he will pursue, would, in the circumstances stated, be justified by international law. I think it impossible to deny the belligerent right of Chile to employ torpedoes against the Spanish squadron, and equally impossible to deny the belligerent right of Spain to bombard the town which those instruments are employed to protect. It is of course not within my province to express any opinion upon the policy of such a proceeding upon the part of either of the belligerents.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Reeeived May 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 2, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 14th ultimo, in regard to the detention of the British brig "Dolphin," by the Spanish squadron off Valparaiso, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch upon this subject which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago (No. 42); and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch, together with the former papers in the case therewith annexed,* into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers now laid before me confirm the opinion which I had the honour to express in my former Report, namely, that inasmuch as the agent for the owner of this vessel declines to produce the proof of her innocent destination, which, if she be innocent, it must be in his power to produce, in order to remove the suspicion not unreasonably entertained by the Spanish Admiral, he has no right to call for the intervention, on his behalf, of Her Majesty's Government.

It appears that Mr. Consul Rouse has frequently given to this agent the best advice upon this subject. He has suggested to him either to produce to him (the Consul) the owner's instructions to the master, his correspondence with the master, and with his agent at Lota and Coronel, who were concerned in hiring and loading the vessel, or to obtain a surety for the actual importation of the coals into Monte Video.

The agent (Señor Lopez) declines to take either of these courses: for not taking the latter he alleges as one reason, the difficulty of finding a surety; but I can find no reason whatever why he refuses to take the former course.

* Mr. Thomson, No. 30; Mr. Rouse, No. 5; to Mr. Thomson, No. 36.

I think that Mr. Lopez should be distinctly apprized that Her Majesty's Representative cannot in these circumstances further interfere on his behalf.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May , 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 15th instant, which had been received from Messrs. Aitken and Bodger and Company, of Glasgow, relative to the losses incurred by them in consequence of the bombardment of the city of Valparaiso by the Spanish naval forces.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a draft of the reply which it is intended to return to Messrs. Aitken; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether this proposed answer is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed answer is proper to be sent; but it occurs to us to suggest to your Lordship, whether it may not be expedient also to take notice of the allegation of Messrs. Aitken and Co., that "this destruction has taken place with the concurrence of the British Admiral and Government Representative at Valparaiso;" and to observe that if by that statement it is meant to assert or imply that the British Admiral, or Her Majesty's Representative at Valparaiso, either approved or encouraged the bombardment of the city by the Spanish fleet, Her Majesty's Government believe such a representation to be the very contrary of the truth, while if the statement means only that the British Admiral and Her Majesty's Representative did not actively prevent or interfere with the operations of the Spanish fleet, it is wholly irrelevant; inasmuch as any such prevention or interference would have been entirely inconsistent with Her Majesty's declared neutrality in the war between Spain and Chile.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 31, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 61), inclosing a copy and translation of a Decree which has been issued by the President of that Republic, dated March 16, prohibiting neutral vessels from communicating with the Spanish ships of war, under the penalty of not being allowed to touch at or load in any ports of the Republic; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the observations which I had the honour to make in my Report of the 19th of May appear to me to be applicable to the present question. I think that it is competent to the Government of Chile in time of war to make a Decree which forbids the admission of all neutral vessels, except under certain specified conditions, equally applicable to all, into Chilean ports. The conditions in this case have for their object to prevent the belligerent blockading force from obtaining supplies whereby they are enabled or materially assisted in maintaining the blockade. These supplies, it is alleged, are furnished by neutral vessels on their way to Chilean ports. To refuse, therefore, to allow the entrance of these vessels into these ports is, or may be, a means of preventing the enemy receiving the supplies necessary for the continuance of his blockade.

I think it is a measure of self-defence which the Government of Chile has a right in its dominions to put in force.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, relative to the capture of the "Thalaba," a British vessel, by the Chilean gun-boat "Covadonga," and the decision which has been come to by the Prize Court on the subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear from the papers before me that the "Thalaba" has been actually condemned by the Prize Court, but that a demand for her condemnation has been made to that Court by the Attorney-General—a demand which he supports by a very able argument.

Assuming—which there seems no reason whatever to doubt—the facts to be as he states them, I am clearly of opinion that, by the law applicable to these facts, this vessel and her cargo would be properly condemned by the Prize Court.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 24.)

Doctors' Commons, December 24, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile relative to a war tax of 5 per cent., which was authorized by the Chilean Legislature on the declaration of war with Spain, and made law by an edict of the President in Council, dated September 24, 1865.

That Mr. Thomson calls the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the position of British subjects with regard to such contributions under the terms of the Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Chile, and also to the terms of the Treaty on this point between France and Chile; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the nature of any instructions which should be sent thereon to Mr. Thomson.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Mr. Thomson should be instructed to the effect that he has correctly interpreted the terms of the Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Chile, namely, that these terms do not exempt the subjects of Great Britain from the payment of war tax, and that these subjects have no right to be heard upon the question whether the tax be or be not illegal upon constitutional grounds. That it would, however, certainly be matter of just remonstrance on the part of Great Britain if her subjects were made liable to a tax from which the subjects of other friendly Powers were exempted. At the same time, apart from this consideration, and on general principles, it appears to be just and fair that foreign subjects domiciled and resident in a State, which they do not choose to leave in time of war, should bear their share in the expense of defending the country in which they reside from the attack of an enemy.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of December, 1865, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 8th of that month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking (No. 232, October 13, 1865), relative to the execution of the Chinese subject who was delivered up by the British authorities at Hong Kong; and to request that we would take this despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 16, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th of January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Mr. Wade (No. 233, October 18, 1865), inclosing drafts of Regulations proposed by Sir Edmund Hornby to be issued for the registration of mortgages, bills of sale, and companies in China and Japan; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proposed Regulations as to the registration of mortgages, and as to bills of sale, seem to us to be unobjectionable, and proper to be confirmed, so far as they go. We are not sure that the addition suggested by Mr. Wade, of words expressly limiting them to mortgages and sales by British subjects is (in strictness) necessary: for we think that such a limitation, even if not expressed, ought to be implied. Considering, however, that there might be mixed transactions of mortgage and sale between British subjects and foreigners, we incline to think that the addition of such words of limitation might be expedient, for the purpose of showing that the regulation was meant to apply to all mortgages and sales by British subjects, whoever might be the mortgagee or vendee, but not to any mortgages or sales to British subjects by foreigners.

We have further to point out that both these Regulations seem to us defective, and insufficient for their intended purposes: the former, because, while it expressly gives to "judgment and simple contract debts contracted before the execution of the deed," precedence over an unregistered mortgage, it does not give the like precedence to subsequent mortgages or conveyances for valuable consideration without notice, even though the subsequent deed (if registrable) may be duly registered; and the latter, because, while ordering the registration of all bills of sale, it omits altogether to declare or define what shall be the consequence, or the legal effect, of non-registration. In these respects both these regulations seem to us to require material amendment: but, in the meantime, we think no harm can be done by leaving them to their operation.

The third Regulation, as to joint stock companies (which, in the judgment of Mr. Wade, is of much more doubtful necessity, not to say policy), appears to us to be open to a fatal objection, viz., that it says these companies must be registered in Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan, "in the same way and subject to the same provisions as if formed in England, they would have had to comply with." Not to criticize the mere phraseology (which is certainly faulty), we find it difficult to understand what the precise effect of this general reference to the English law, as to the registration of similar companies, is intended or might be judicially determined to be. Is it meant to apply to companies in China, all the provisions contained in Sections 4 and 6 to 20, inclusive, of the English Companies Act, 1862 (25 and 26 Vict., cap. 89)? If not all, what part of these provisions is, and what part is not, to be so applied? Would it be competent, in this or any other way, to make the whole applicable? These and other questions unavoidably suggest themselves. We think that a regulation of this kind ought, upon the face of it, clearly to prescribe the conditions of registration, and ought not to attempt to do so by any such general reference to the law of England. And, upon this ground, we feel compelled to advise that this Regulation should be disallowed by Her Majesty.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th of July last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with the previous papers,[*] a despatch from Sir Edmund Hornby,[†] respecting the tenure of land in British Settlements at Chinese ports; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we find it very difficult to form a satisfactory opinion upon the points as to which Mr. Wade and Sir Edmund Hornby disagree. In our former Report, in which we expressed our concurrence (generally) with the views of Mr. Wade, we were necessarily much influenced by the weight which we felt to be justly due to the practical judgment of a public servant of great ability and knowledge, and experience of China and of the foreign communities in China. Sir Edmund Hornby has not had the same local experience; but we think it would be advisable for Her Majesty's Government to suspend, at all events, any decided action upon these points in a direction contrary to Sir Edmund Hornby's opinion until it is known how far Mr. Wade may still be disposed to urge the necessity for such action.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 9.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 8, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking (No. 269, November 20, 1865), inclosing a copy of a note to Prince Kung, in which, with reference to the case of Mansfield, a British subject who had lately been surrendered by the Chinese authorities to the British Consul at Kiu-kiang, charged with the commission of certain offences in China, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires takes occasion to point out to the Chinese Government that the XVIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin does not, as that Government would seem to imagine, authorize the trial by a Mixed Court of British subjects accused of crimes in China, and that the words in the Chinese version of that Article signifying acting "in concert," merely mean such a concert as is implied by a Chinese authority being invited to be present in such cases while the trial is going on; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the words "acting in concert" do not appear in the 16th section of the English version of the Treaty.

If the Chinese be rightly rendered into English by these words, they would appear to us materially to affect the operation of the Treaty, and it would be desirable that a more correct translation should be given, to enable us to judge of their exact effect.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 10, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Mr. Wade (No. 234, October 18, 1865), and its inclosures, respecting the claim to British protection in China of Chinese who have been born in the Straits Settlements; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous correspondence upon this subject with Sir J. Bonham was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That while, on the one hand, it is not difficult to believe that great practical inconvenience must often arise from the claims of these persons to the protection and privileges of British subjects, on the other hand we think that such claims ought not to be refused solely on the ground of the claimants wearing the same dress as Chinese; and therefore (although it is both right and necessary to be satisfied of the identity of any person producing a certificate, before interfering on his behalf) we think that Mr. Consul Robertson has, at present at least, no right to make his recognition of these claims dependent on the circumstance of dress.

Nevertheless, it would, in our judgment, be expedient that the Chinese of the British Settlements should be induced, if not required, to adopt some distinguishing badge or article of apparel, though the adoption of the European dress ought not to be insisted upon.

Certainly, the letting the hair grow, and not shaving the crown, would be by far the safest and best criterion, if these persons could be induced to adopt this fashion. The fate of Chin Ring Ching would, apparently, then be avoided: at all events, the Chinese authorities would be thereby deprived, by their own showing, of the right of treating such persons as Chinese subjects.

We are, of course, aware of the obstacles which, probably, local feelings and prejudices may oppose to this scheme; but it seems to us that an endeavour should be made to procure its adoption.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 20, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 8th instant, in which we observed that the words "acting in concert" do not appear in the 16th section of the English version of the Treaty between this country and China, and added that if the Chinese be rightly rendered into English by those words, they would appear materially to affect the operation of the Treaty; and that it would be desirable that a more correct translation should be given, to enable us to judge of their exact effect.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that your Lordship will instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Peking to furnish an exact translation of the Chinese version of that Article, and that, in the meantime, he was to draw our attention to Article L of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, in which it is stipulated that, in the event of there being any difference of meaning between the English and Chinese texts of the Treaty, the English Government will hold the sense, as expressed in the English text, to be the correct sense; and to request that we would take this matter again into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the bearing of that stipulation on the question raised by Mr. Wade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Article L of the Treaty, to which our attention is now drawn, certainly appears to justify the opinion of Her Majesty's Minister at Peking; but the omission, in the English version, of such important words as "acting in concert" seems to us still to call for some explanation.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghae (No. 8, February 7), inclosing copies of despatches he had addressed to Sir R. In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, the decision of Mr. Consul Winchester and Sir E. Hornby was right, namely, that Mr. Schmidt should, under the Order in Council referred to, be treated as amenable to the French authorities, with respect to all transactions which happened between the 18th of March, 1863, when he procured himself to be matriculated as a Frenchman, and the 30th October, 1865, when he obtained, by virtue of his British birth and allegiance, British registration.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 29.)

Doctors' Commons, May 28, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Sir Rutherford Alcock (No. 44, March 12, 1866), respecting the right of trade at Kiung-chow, in Hainan, one of the ports named in the Treaty of Tien-tsin,* but to which Her Majesty's Government have not yet thought it necessary to appoint a Consul.

That I should perceive that certain British subjects have embarked in this trade, and that the Chinese authorities have made representations to Her Majesty's Consul at Canton, with a view to its being put a stop to, and that although the Acting Governor of Hong Kong has authorized vessels to be cleared from that port for Kiung-chow on the ground of the right conferred by the Treaty, Sir Rutherford Alcock, on the other hand, considers that the Chinese Government may justly refuse trade until a Consul is appointed, and that the right conferred by the Treaty does not exist until a public notification from the Chief Superintendent of British trade declares the port to be opened; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these points into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this matter, and have the honour to report—

That it does not seem to me necessary to express a positive opinion that it is not, in theory, competent to the proper British authority to authorize trading from Hong Kong to one of the ports mentioned in section XI of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, the opening of which has not been formally declared and to which no Consul has been appointed, because I am clearly of opinion that, practically, such a course ought not to be taken, as it would be at variance with the spirit and true meaning, if not with the letter, of the Treaty of Tien-tsin.

I agree with Sir Rutherford Alcock that the exterritorial privilege of jurisdiction accorded by Article XVI (not XV) is granted on the faith that there will be a Consul "or other public functionary" in the place to exercise the jurisdiction of which the Chinese Government has deprived itself.

* Treaty of Tien-tsin; Treaty of Pekin. See Hertslet, vol. xi, pages 86 and 112.

I think, too, that there should be a formal notification that a port not hitherto opened is, henceforth, to be considered as open.

It is, of course, for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether the trade at Hainan be likely to warrant the establishment of a Consul at that port, but until this has taken place I think clearances from the Harbour-master at Hong Kong, from that place to Hainan, should not be issued.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he had inclosed a draft of a despatch upon that subject which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir Rutherford Alcock by the mail of the 26th instant (No. 167).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the draft despatch to Sir Rutherford Alcock is proper to be sent. With respect to the prosecution of cases against British subjects in which the interests of public order in China are concerned, we are of opinion that the most proper and advisable course will be, not to appoint a public prosecutor with a salary, but to give a general retainer to Mr. Myburgh (or to whoever else may be the best Counsel practising in the Consular Courts where such prosecutions may take place), on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and to deliver briefs to the Counsel so retained in the usual manner, and upon the ordinary terms of professional remuneration, at the cost of Her Majesty's Government, in each separate case, as it arises.

At all events we think this will be the best expedient for the present until more experience has been gained of the working of the whole system and of the probable frequency and importance of cases requiring public prosecutions.

Doctors' Commons, August 1, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Sir Rutherford Alcock (No. 79, May 9, 1866), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Mr. Consul Winchester, and of certain Memorials from Shanghae, on the question of the right of small steamers under foreign flags to navigate the inland waters of China; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the view taken of it by Sir Rutherford Alcock is the correct one.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that Sir R. Alcock has correctly interpreted the Articles in the Treaty of Tien-tsin which relate to this question, and that it is perfectly competent to the Government of China to prohibit the navigation of the inland waters of that country by these small steamers, which belong to the foreign firms at Shanghae.

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (No. 80, May 10), and also a private letter and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghae on a question raised by the so-called Municipal Council at Shanghae as to the right of the Chinese authorities to levy taxes on the Chinese established within the foreign settlement; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of a Blue Book laid before Parliament in 1863, which contains, at page 87, a copy of an instruction from Sir F. Bruce to Her Majesty's then Consul at Shanghae bearing upon this question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by Sir F. Bruce, Sir R. Alcock, Sir E. Hornby, and Mr. Consul Winchester, and the Consul for the United States of North America.

That we are clearly of opinion that the Chinese subjects resident in Shanghae are amenable to the jurisdiction and authority of the Chinese Government.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 8th and 21st March last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (No. 110), forwarding a translation of the XVIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, together with a letter from Mr. Wade, explaining the apparent divergence between the Chinese and English texts of the Treaty; and Mr. Egerton was to request that we would take this paper into our consideration, together with Mr. Wade's former despatch (No. 269), on which our opinion was asked in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of February, and which was also inclosed, and that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience. A copy of the Treaty was inclosed for our information.

In obedience to the commands of your Lordship we have considered this question, and have the honour to report—

That the difference in the language of the English and Chinese version of Article XVI of the Treaty is much to be regretted, and does not appear to us to be very satisfactorily accounted for; and it would, in our opinion, be desirable that, as far as possible, any direct issue with the Chinese authorities, as to the effect of this divergence in the two versions, should be avoided by that species of courtesy and friendly consent which, as we understand, has hitherto prevailed in cases where subjects of both nations were concerned. But we are of opinion, looking to Article L of the Treaty, that if it should on any occasion be necessary to determine which text is to govern the action of the English authorities, the English version must be adhered to, and that Mr. Wade is justified in the explanation by which he endeavours to make the Chinese version consistent with the English. We think the XVIth Article in either version cannot be so interpreted as to interfere with the right of each Government to exercise independent jurisdiction over its own subjects.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with Mr. Egerton's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (No. 120), forwarding a regulation respecting the registration of Companies, which, on the recommendation of Sir Edmund Hornby, has been published in China by Sir Rutherford Alcock; and he was to request that we would take this paper into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The former papers referred to by Sir Rutherford Alcock were inclosed for our information.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this matter, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed regulations as to the mode in which partnerships may be sued, avoid the objections made by the late Law Officers to the regulations formerly proposed for the registration of Companies, and that the regulations now proposed are proper to be confirmed.

We observe that the defects in the regulation for the registration of mortgages and bills of sale, which were pointed out by the late Law Officers, and to which attention was called by the despatch of Earl Russell of the 21st of February, do not appear to have been remedied, or in any way noticed.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received September 13.)

Doctors' Commons, September 12, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, together with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires in the United States of Colombia, relative to the application made to him by Mr. Carlos J. Irwin for a certificate of British nationality; and Mr. Egerton was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. O. Leary on the subject.

In obedience to the commands of your Lordship I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the accuracy of the statement of Mr. Carlos J. Irwin that he is the son of a British-born parent, there is no doubt that, according to the English law, he lies under the obligation of an indelible allegiance to Her Majesty. He ought, therefore, upon general principles, to be entitled (unless by some act of his own he has forfeited it) to British protection. I do not find in the papers before me that he has done any such act.

I would, therefore, humbly advise that an answer should be sent to Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires to the following effect: that Mr. Irwin must be considered as entitled generally to British protection, except in Venezuela, the country of his birth, in the event of the Government of that country, while he is resident in it, putting forth a claim to his allegiance by reason of his being born in that State, in which case Mr. Irwin must be apprised that he must not rely upon the protection arising out of the British origin of his father being extended to him.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received June 23.)

Doctors' Commons, June 23, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, together with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Quito, reporting the circumstances under which some Spanish subjects residing at Guayaquil had embarked on board the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's ship "Favorita," and the proceedings of the authorities to obtain their removal from on board her; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon, and also as to the instructions which should be sent to Colonel Neale in the event of a repetition of similar proceedings on the part of the authorities.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the English merchant-vessels and steamers not carrying Her Majesty's Commission are subject to the jurisdiction of the State in whose ports they happen to be.

The masters of such vessels are not bound to use force to put any passengers who have duly taken their passage on board the vessel on shore; but they cannot lawfully refuse to allow the proper authorities of the place to exercise jurisdiction over their own subjects who are on board the vessel in port; and I think that, strictly speaking, in this class must, for this purpose, be included all foreigners domiciled in the State, who have gone on board contrary to the law of the State.

It is, of course, most expedient to avoid all chances of collision with the local authorities on questions of this kind.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 9, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the French Ambassador at this Court,[*] denouncing the Extradition Treaty between this country and France, together with the previous correspondence[†] to which it refers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Lord Cowley on the subject; and that this draft, as first drawn, was referred to the Home Office for Sir George Grey's concurrence; and in consequence of a letter dated the 3rd instant, received from the Home Office (sent therewith), the original draft had been modified and brought into its present shape.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the Treaties and legislative enactments bearing on this subject.[‡]

And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the draft to Lord Cowley into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion upon the propriety of its being sent, and also any observations which it might occur to us to offer in the present stage of the business.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a further draft of a despatch to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris with reference to the question of the Extradition Treaty between this country and France, and to request that we would take this draft into our consideration, together with that inclosed in his letter of the previous day, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think both these despatches may properly be sent, subject to the observation (with respect to the latter of them) that there does not appear to us to be any insuperable objection, in principle, to a Treaty for the extradition of escaped criminals, who have been convicted, after a regular trial at which they have been present, with full opportunities of self-defence, of any offences which would have been a sufficient cause for their extradition before trial.

of which Treaty provides that the ships of Monaco shall enjoy in French ports the same treatment as French ships; that on receiving this Convention, your Lordship consulted the Lords of Trade as to the expediency of addressing to Lord Cowley the instruction of which draft was inclosed, together with a letter from the Board of Trade, conveying their views in this matter; and Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a further despatch from Lord Cowley, calling attention to an article in the "Moniteur," containing certain explanations as to the nature of the Convention, and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the facts of the case are such as to call for any or what representation on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the Government of France.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the article in the "Moniteur" does not deny that if by this Treaty of France with Monaco, a mutual reduction of duty in the Tariffs of France and Monaco was stipulated for, other States having Treaties with France containing a "most favoured nation" clause would be entitled to claim to be placed upon the same footing; but it argues that the Treaty with Monaco is of a different character, having simply for its object to effect, as the Ist Article shows, a mere Customs Union ("Union Douanière"), and to extend the line of French Custom-houses to the limits of the Principality of Monaco.

The consequences of this argument are alarming, beecause it might be easily extended so as to include the Kingdom of Belgium in the line of French Custom-houses; but apart from this consideration, the argument does not seem to me, having regard to the facts of the case, satisfactory.

The true question is, has France by this Treaty conceded to a foreign State certain advantages not enjoyed by other States with respect to Customs duties? Now, the Treaty recognizes the Principality of Monaco, as in every respect an independent State, and by the Ist Article, the Prince of Monaco reserves to himself the right of concluding Treaties, not contradictory of this Convention, with foreign States. The Prince, by Article II, is to appoint a "Capitaine de Port," who is to receive the duties payable by all foreign States, except France.

Under the name of Customs Union, therefore, a foreign State is practically admitted to the enjoyment of certain privileges with respect to the French Tariff in French ports, from which other foreign States are excluded.

It is quite obvious that the change of name on which the "Moniteur" so much relies, is of no importance if the thing be the same.

If, indeed, the Principality of Monaco had become part of the realm of France, as Scotland became part of the realm of England, or by any lawful process of incorporation, whereby its identity as a State was lost, and there was a French law that the same system of Custom-houses and duties should prevail throughout the French Empire, it might, perhaps, be plausibly contended that no casus fœderis, with respect to States possessing a Treaty with a "most favoured nation" clause, had arisen. But this is not the case, and it is difficult to escape from the conclusion that, in fact and reality, the little State of Monaco has obtained, upon whatever grounds and under whatever phraseology, the reduction or suppression of a duty in the French Tariff, to which third States with "a most favoured nation" clause ought, as a matter of strict right, to be admitted to share.

The question is, however, practically of such very little importance that I would humbly suggest that while it might perhaps be expedient that the view which Her Majesty's Government take of this matter should be intimated to the Government of France, no formal representation need be made on the subject, unless, indeed, other States, putting a like construction upon the Treaty, should claim and obtain a recognition of their right to a reduction of the French Tariff.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us printed copies of drafts of Treaties of Extradition which have been proposed to your Lordship by the Prussian Ambassador and the Hanse Towns Minister at this Court; that in the margin of the latter some amendments in red ink were suggested; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take both drafts into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to their respective stipulations.

Your Lordship further directed Mr. Layard to request, that as it is probable that demands on the part of other countries may be made for Treaties of Extradition with Great Britain, we would consider and report our opinion with reference to the two drafts now submitted to us, as to what form of Articles it would be desirable to adopt for such Treaties generally.*

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose notes from the Hanse Town Minister (dated the 8th and 10th ultimo), containing copies of convictions, according to the laws of the three Hanseatic Republics.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these drafts into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the draft Treaty with Prussia, we think it proper to be executed.

With respect to the Treaty with the Hanse Towns, we think that in Articles I and II the alterations in red ink (already made) should be adopted, and that they should also be adopted in sections 1 to 8 of Article III; but that the word "burglary" should be omitted at the end of section 7; sections 9 and 10 should not be omitted. We think that, as to Article IV, the red ink substituted Article should be adopted; the red ink alterations should be adopted also for Article V, and also for Articles VI, VII, VIII, IX, X. Article XI should be omitted. As to Article XII, six months does not appear too long a time.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating, that with reference to the question now pending between Her Majesty's Government and that of France, respecting the denunciation by the latter of the Extradition Treaty of the 13th February, 1843, he was directed by your Lordship to call our attention to that Treaty, which, together with the Act of the 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 75, we should find in the 6th volume of Hertslet's Treaties, pages 344 and 448, and also to the further Act of the 8 & 9 Vict., cap. 130, sent to us in Mr. Hammond's letter; and he was to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion, at our early convenience, whether, under the Treaty and Acts, as they now stand, there could be accepted by the police magistrates in this country, in support of a demand of extradition, and held to be sufficient for the purpose of extradition, in lieu of a "mandat d'arrêt," a regular "acte d'accusation," giving a recital of the whole crime, and examined, before it was passed, by competent French judges, and, if required, containing the names of the witnesses and the depositions made by them; and if such an "acte d'accusation" could be accepted as sufficient under the existing Treaty, whether there would be any objection to a person charged under the Extradition Treaty, being at once arrested and held in custody until the "acte" could be drawn up, and produced before the magistrate; and that, if we should be of opinion that such an "acte d'accusation" could not be accepted under the Acts of Parliament as they now stand, your Lordship would be glad further to receive our opinion whether there would be any objection to submitting to Parliament a Bill enabling it to be accepted, and whether such a Bill would be likely to be objected to.

Mr. Hammond further stated, that in the printed papers which he transmitted to us on the 29th ultimo, we should find full particulars respecting the purport of an "acte d'accusation."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* See, as to this point, our Report, in answer to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st February, as to the French Treaty.

1866

That we are of opinion that an "acte d'accusation" could not, under the present law, be accepted as sufficient to warrant the extradition of an accused person. But we see no valid objection to submitting to Parliament a Bill enabling magistrates to commit accused persons, with a view to extradition, upon an "acte d'accusation," of a description to be defined in the Bill.

The principal requisites to be insisted on in such an "acte d'accusation" appear to us to be, that it should clearly describe the offence, so as to bring it within the terms of the Treaty, and purport to be drawn up upon a judicial investigation of evidence sufficient to establish a primâ facie case of guilt.

We cannot help thinking that such a Bill, if properly explained, would be likely to pass without much opposition.

We may add, that it appears to us feasible to prepare a general measure giving Her Majesty power to conclude Conventions with foreign Powers on certain terms: first, on the terms of the existing Convention with French or America; secondly, on the terms of accepting the "acte d'accusation" (to be defined as we have before described), in lieu of the evidence now required; thirdly, on the terms of delivering up convicted criminals, upon their conviction being duly certified, after a public trial, at which the accused was present.

Counter stipulations may be properly insisted upon, that the criminal surrendered shall be tried only upon the charge on which he was surrendered; or, at all events, on no other charge than such as are within the Treaty.

Lincoln's Inn, February 23, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 1st instant, requesting our opinion on two points bearing on the question of extradition between this country and France, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us an extract of a despatch from Lord Cowley reporting two questions put to him on the subject by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration and acquaint your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Lord Cowley; and that, as bearing on this matter, Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose, for our perusal, a Memorandum of what passed at a meeting held at the Foreign Office on the 8th instant to consider the question of extradition between this country and France.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we think a simple French warrant, without evidence, would not be sufficient, as the law now stands, to enable a person whose extradition was demanded to be detained; but if Parliament were asked to sanction the substitution of an "acte d'accusation," founded upon and stating the effect of evidence for the evidence now required by law, it would not (in our opinion) be unreasonable or improper also to provide that the person demanded might be detained in custody upon a simple "mandat d'arrêt," for a short time, to be limited, in order to enable the necessary "acte d'accusation" to be drawn up and produced against him.

For this purpose, however, some evidence of identity would still be indispensable.

As to the second question of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, we think that Parliament might not unwisely or improperly be asked to sanction the extradition of an escaped convict convicted, at a public trial at which he was present, of any of the crimes mentioned in the Treaty.

We think it necessary to observe that we have never understood it to be now the law (as seems to have been assumed in the recent Conference at the Foreign Office) that a person whose extradition was demanded could not controvert before the magistrate the truth of the depositions produced against him, or produce before the magistrate exculpatory evidence. The contrary view has been invariably acted upon in all the recent cases under the Treaty with the United States, which arose during the late war in America, whether in this country or in the Colonies; and we think it might be very dangerous to deprive persons accused of the power of producing evidence in such cases.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 10, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th January last, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th of December, respecting an application made by an English solicitor in Paris for permission to inspect certain documents in the French Foreign Office, bearing upon a suit pending at Calcutta, and in which we advert to the practice observed in France in regard to "Commissions Rogatoires," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Earl Cowley (No. 37) in reply to one addressed to his Excellency, of which the draft was therewith annexed (No. 16), embodying our observations on this subject: and Mr. Hammond stated that we should perceive that Her Majesty's Ambassador points out that the facts do not bear out our observations in regard to the practice and feeling in France with reference to such "Commissions Rogatoires;" and he was, therefore, again to submit to us the papers in this case,* to afford us the opportunity of making any alteration in our Report that we may desire to do, and he was, at the same time, to say that your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken with regard to the question raised by Lord Cowley whether some means should not be found of making it obligatory on Tribunals in this country to have recourse to the intervention of the Foreign Office whenever it may be found necessary to issue a "Commission Rogatoire" to take any evidence in France.

The papers referred to in the inclosure of Lord Cowley's despatch were forwarded to us therewith for our further information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have further considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we were not aware that any formal objection had ever been taken to the execution of voluntary Commissions in France, while, as a matter of fact, it is certain that a great number of such Commissions have been so executed; but after reading the letter of Lord Cowley of 9th January, 1866, we should wish to withdraw these words, "it is to be observed that no exception has hitherto been taken in France to this practice," from our former Report, and we think they should be omitted in the instructions to be given to Earl Cowley.

With respect to the further question submitted to us, namely, whether the Tribunals in this country should not be obliged to execute Commissions in France solely by application to the French authorities in the manner pointed out by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, we think that an Act of Parliament would be necessary to render such a mode of procedure legally binding upon the Tribunals of this country; but we see no reason why an Act of Parliament might not be framed having for its object to regulate the manner of issuing and executing Commissions from the Courts of this country, for the examination of witnesses abroad, so that in France or in another foreign country to which, by Order in Council, the Act might be made applicable, such Commissions should be transmitted and certified to the proper political or judicial authorities of such country in such form and manner as Her Majesty by Order in Council may direct, and not otherwise, and may be made conformable, both as to the forms of the Commissions themselves and as to the mode of their execution, to the laws and usages of such foreign country. Should this course be adopted we think that the power to be so given to Her Majesty in Council had better be general, and that its application to France, or to any other particular country, should be the subject either of formal Convention or of some other mode of diplomatic agreement which would prescribe the detail of the practice to be followed in each case, so that such detail might be embodied in the Order in Council to be made thereon.

It is to be observed that by our own statute 19 and 20 Vict., cap. 113, "An Act to provide for taking evidence in Her Majesty's dominions in relation to civil and commercial matters pending before foreign tribunals," it is provided that the Superior Courts in Her Majesty's dominions shall have power, at the request of a competent foreign Court, to enforce the examination of witnesses in this country in aid of the jurisdiction of such foreign Court.

* Mr. Grey, No. 133; Law Officers, December 29.

In this statute a provision is made for the personal protection of the witness from being compelled to criminate himself, and any similar conditions might, of course, properly be insisted upon by any foreign country in which witnesses might be held bound to submit themselves to examination in aid of civil proceedings in any British Courts.

Arrangements of this nature would facilitate the administration of justice in this country, while they would obviate the objection stated by Lord Cowley to be felt in France to the execution of voluntary Commissions as involving the exercise of some kind of jurisdiction in the foreign State. We do not indeed think that this objection is generally well-founded, inasmuch as no claim is made to exercise any compulsory authority as to obtaining evidence, or to make use of the evidence obtained within the territorial limits of the foreign State. Some weight, however, ought to be ascribed to the objection, in any particular instance, in which a foreign State may have prohibited, by its municipal law, the administering of oaths except by some defined public authority, and (whether such a law exists in France or not, as to which we have no information) we think it is clearly desirable to avoid all difficult international questions of this kind.

Lincoln's Inn, March 12, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that, upon the receipt of our Report of the 23rd ultimo, referring to certain questions put by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to Earl Cowley on the question of the Extradition Treaty, your Lordship thought it desirable to transmit an extract of the concluding portion to Sir Thomas Henry, for his observations as to the practice observed in regard to allowing persons whose extradition is demanded to controvert before the magistrate the truth of the depositions produced against them, or to produce before the magistrate exculpatory evidence; and Mr. Layard was pleased to transmit to us two letters in reply from Sir Thomas Henry, dated the 26th and 27th ultimo, and to state that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with any further remarks, if we had any to offer upon the subject. Our former Report was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our further consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the observations which we had the honour to make on this subject in our former Report. By those observations we did not mean to imply that the magistrate ought "to try the case;" that is to say, to determine whether the prisoner was innocent or guilty; but that, before committing him to gaol, with a view to extradition, the magistrate ought to be satisfied upon the whole of the evidence, including that of the prisoner (if he produces any), that a case sufficiently strong is established to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, if the offence charged had been committed in this country.

We agree with Sir Thomas Henry to this extent, that where the evidence is conflicting in material particulars, it will generally be the duty of the magistrate to send the case to be investigated by another Tribunal; but we cannot subscribe to his opinion (as we understand it) that the magistrate is in all cases bound to give absolute credence to the whole of the evidence for the prosecution, and to disbelieve any evidence for the defence which may in any degree conflict with it. If this were so, the right which Sir Thomas Henry in his letter of the 27th of February admits the prisoner to possess, of calling witnesses to controvert the evidence for the prosecution, would be wholly nugatory.

It is possible to conceive cases in which primâ facie evidence for the prosecution might be contradicted by evidence for the prisoner so conclusive that it would be manifestly unjust to surrender him; and we apprehend that, under similar circumstances, the magistrate would not think it his duty to commit for trial a person charged before him with an offence against the laws of this country.

The provision that, in extradition cases, depositions may be substituted for vivâ voce evidence appears to us to have no bearing on the admissibility of evidence for the defence; if it had, we should conceive it to bear in favour of the admissibility of such evidence, inasmuch as written depositions are (as a rule) less reliable, and more open to be controverted than vivâ voce testimony.

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a note from the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to the French Ambassador at this Court, and which had been communicated to him by the latter, in which the question is raised as to the treatment of neutral property under the flags of Spain, Chile, and Peru, during the continuance of hostilities between the former Power and those two Republics, regard being had to the fact that Chile and Peru have given their adhesion, which Spain has not done, to the Declaration of the Congress of Paris of the 16th of April, 1856, that "neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, are not liable to capture under enemy's flag."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to request that we would take M. Drouyn de Lhuys' note into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opioion, at our early convenience, upon the points raised in it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the French Minister for Foreign Affairs refers in his letter to that Article only of the Declaration of Paris which, relinquishing the peculiar pretensions formerly advanced in the French Ordinances, recognized and established the ancient general rule of maritime international law, that neutral goods in enemy's ships are not liable to capture. Great Britain and most other European nations have always recognized and acted upon this rule, except when its application may have been displaced by particular international Conventions. It is a rule established in the interest of neutrals, and not of belligerents; and we think that all the Powers, parties to the Declaration of Paris, are bound to respect and act upon it, in favour of the subjects of neutral States who are parties or who have acceded to the Declaration, even when they may be engaged in war with any Power which has not acceded thereto. We think, therefore, that Chile and Peru are now bound, as between themselves and all such other States, as, having acceded to the Declaration of Paris, are neutrals in the present war, to hold the goods of subjects of such neutral States, if found on board Spanish vessels free from capture, notwithstanding the fact that Spain has never acceded to that Declaration.

We are further of opinion that, by the ancient general rule of maritime international law, Spain is also bound to respect goods proved to be neutral, on board Chilean or Peruvian vessels, except in cases in which she may be entitled, under any particular Treaty or Convention with the neutral Power to whose subjects they may belong, to treat them as enemy's goods.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our perusal, in case we should have any observations to offer upon it, a letter dated the 17th ultimo which has been received at the Foreign Office, inclosing copy of an instruction addressed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to the Governor of British Guiana, relative to the measures to be taken to prevent the immigration of escaped foreign convicts into that Colony, a subject discussed in our Report of the 18th of December last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to our letter of the 28th of February last, expressing our concurrence in the Draft Order in Council for carrying out the provisions of the Act lately passed relative to the navigation of the mouths of the Danube, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a Protocol, signed at a meeting of the Conference at Paris on the 28th ultimo, sanctioning the provisions of the Act in question; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether any reference should be made to this Protocol in the proposed Order in Council above referred to, a fair draft of which was inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence, as marked in the margin, with reference to the circumstances under which a convoy of merchandize belonging in great part to British merchants, and which appears to have been despatched from Tampico to the interior on the faith of assurances of protection given by the French Commandant of a "contra guerilla," had fallen into the hands of the guerillas.

That I should perceive that the question has arisen as to what course, if any, the British and French Governments should pursue, in regard to this affair, in the interests of British and French merchants who have suffered by this occurrence, and that the French Government are of opinion that under the circumstances it would not be equitable to fix upon the Mexican Government the responsibility of what has taken place; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in order to render the Mexican Government responsible for the loss of this merchandize, it would, having regard to the particular circumstances, be necessary to prove that the Capitaine Jaquin, acting under their express authority, guaranteed the safe convoy of these goods. It does not appear to me that this proposition can be established, and I am inclined to agree with the French Government that it would be inequitable to hold the Mexican Government responsible for a calamity incident to the disturbed state of the country, of which the foreign merchants were fully cognizant.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 8, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th of April ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports, dated as in the margin,* on questions arising out of the denunciation by the French Government of the Extradition Treaty between the two countries, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, giving an account of an interview which, in company with Sir Thomas Henry, who was visiting Paris, he had with M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the French Minister of Justice, and one of the Secretaries of the Department of Justice, with the object of ascertaining whether some means might not be devised for making the existing Treaty and Act of Parliament operative for the purpose for which they were designed.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that Sir Thomas Henry, since his return to England, has addressed to your Lordship the letter which was inclosed; that we should perceive that he is of opinion that by a slight alteration in the second section of the Act of the 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 75, the difficulty which now prevents the French Government from supporting their demands for extradition by sufficient evidence might be got over.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that Sir Thomas Henry, as we should see, has framed the draft of an Act which he considers would be sufficient for the purpose, and he was to request that we would take the matter into our early consideration, and report our opinion whether the proposed Act would be sufficient; and, if so, whether it might be submitted to Parliament with a reasonable expectation of its passing through both Houses; and Mr. Hammond further stated that we should observe that the Act, as drawn by Sir Thomas Henry, applies only to the French Treaty; but as the Act of the 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76, for giving effect to the Extradition Treaty with the United States, and the Act of the 25 and 26 Vict., cap. 70, for giving effect to the Treaty with Denmark, severally contain a provision for the admission of depositions in lieu of oral testimony, it will be for our consideration whether a new Act amending the provision on that point as regards the Act giving effect to the Treaty with France, should not be so worded as to be applicable to the same provision in the Acts for giving effect to the Treaties with the United States and with Denmark.

Mr. Hammond was further to suggest that we might request Sir Thomas Henry to communicate personally with us on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the best course which Her Majesty's Government could pursue would be to introduce into Parliament a short Bill, applicable to all cases of extradition under Treaties between this Government and foreign States, which might enable Her Majesty's Government to introduce into all such Treaties the amendment which Sir T. Henry has sketched out with regard to the admission in evidence of certified copies of official

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 26, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence which has passed between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Emperor of the French, and between the Foreign Office and the Admiralty, relating to certain amendments proposed to be made in the identical instructions issued by the British and French Governments in 1859, for the guidance of their naval officers engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade on the African coast; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether I see any objections to the amendments proposed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That after a careful consideration of all the correspondence that has passed between the Governments of Great Britain and France on this important subject, I have the honour to state my opinion that I do not see any objection to the amendments which it is proposed to make in the instructions issued to the naval officers of both countries.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 7, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 660), in reply to a despatch also inclosed (No. 681), reporting a conversation with M. Drouyn de Lhuys on the subject of the late bombardment of Valparaiso by the Spanish naval forces; and stating that he was to request that we would consider and report to your Lordship our opinion on the point stated by the French Minister as to the liability of the Spanish Government for damage done to neutral property; and further stating, that the printed correspondence inclosed in the said letter would show under what circumstances the bombardment took place.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the bombardment of Valparaiso was an act of war, legitimate in this sense, that it was permitted to the belligerent Power by the law of nations, however much at variance it might be with the public opinion of the present day.

The belligerent was not bound, in exercising the right of bombardment, to distinguish between hostile and neutral property in the same place (that place being a port or town of the enemy), and exposed to the same danger.

We have reported to this effect in the cases of British property destroyed by the United States' army, in the sacking and destruction of towns under the control of the Southern Confederacy.

Moreover, it appears, that on the 27th March, warning was given by the Spanish Admiral to the foreign Consuls of his intention to resort to this measure of hostility on the 31st; so that, for four days, an opportunity was afforded for the withdrawal of neutral property from the danger which threatened the city. Moreover, Admiral Denman writes, (paragraph 3, April 2, 1866), "I do not believe a single shot was fired on the part of the town where most of the English merchants reside; and their losses consist of the goods burnt in the Custom-house, where there was a large amount of British property."

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that compensation cannot properly be demanded from the Spanish Government for the injury inflicted on neutral property by the bombardment of Valparaiso.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 25, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that your Lordship had received from Secretary Sir George Grey the draft of a Bill respecting Extradition Treaties which we had been requested to prepare.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that as Sir Thomas Henry has had personal communication with the French Government on the subject, your Lordship thought it desirable, before consulting the Lord Chancellor, as suggested by Sir George Grey, to let Sir Thomas Henry see the Bill, and that gentleman, as we should perceive from his letter therewith inclosed, has suggested certain alterations in it.

Mr. Hammond was therefore pleased to request that we would, at our earliest convenience, consider Sir Thomas Henry's suggestions, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the expediency of adopting them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it is expedient to adopt the alterations suggested by Sir Thomas Henry, and embodied in his draft of the Bill inclosed to Mr. Hammond, and submitted to us with these papers.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received September 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 3, 1866.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd August ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by you to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 28th July ultimo, inclosing copies of correspondence on the subject of the right claimed by the French Consul at Galle, Ceylon, to the assistance of the Government of that Colony, to enable him to detain in the local jails French subjects who have been convicted by him of offences committed on board ship; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Queen's Advocate of Ceylon is erroneous. We think that a steamer of the Messageries Impériales is not a commissioned vessel in the sense that a ship of war is, for purposes of international law. But be this as it may, we think that the Fiscal has no legal authority to execute the sentence of the French Consul at Galle by causing to be imprisoned a French subject convicted by a French Consul of an offence on board of or connected with a French ship, whether of a public or private character.

The Statute 15 Vict., cap. 26, enables British authorities in certain circumstances to "aid in apprehending," and "order to be conveyed," foreign seamen to the foreign ship from which they had deserted; but even for this very limited purpose a Statute was required, as the act would otherwise have been illegal by the common law of England.

It may be questioned whether it would or would not be expedient as a matter of comity to confer power upon the Fiscal at Galle, or on the proper authority in any

British port, to execute the sentence of a foreign Consul; but we are of opinion that such power could not be conferred without the authority of the Legislature.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 30, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence with the Colonial Office and with Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, relative to the transfer from Canada to France, nominally under the Extradition Treaty between the latter country and Great Britain, of M. Lamirande, who is accused of having committed forgery at Poictiers; and to request that we would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the facts stated in the depositions contained in the Colonial Office letters of the 29th ultimo and 17th instant, assuming them to be true and incapable of any explanation, would warrant Her Majesty's Government in making any further communication to the Government of France with a view to the re-delivery of M. Lamirande to British authorities.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 17th instant, on the subject of the transfer of Lamirande from Canada to France, he was directed to inclose a further letter from the Colonial Office inclosing copies of the explanations which have been received from Lord Monck with regard to this matter; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and in reporting on the point already specifically referred to us in Mr. Hammond's previous letter, we would at the same time furnish your Lordship with our opinion on the separate points adverted to in the letter from the Colonial Office, namely, how far the facts of Lamirande's case, and the documents on which his surrender was demanded, would, under the Extradition Treaty, have warranted that surrender, assuming the proper procedure had been adopted? Secondly, whether, and in what respect, if any, the course adopted by the Canadian authorities, and the persons employed by them, in taking Lamirande out of the Montreal jail, and sending him through Great Britain to France, is blameable, and on whom the blame would appear to rest? And, thirdly, what course should be adopted by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in respect to the Canadian Government?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. In answer to your Lordship's first question, we have to observe that we have not before us the materials upon which the warrant of commitment was founded, nor have we the laws of Canada. We cannot, therefore, definitely say whether they were sufficient to justify the extradition. It appears by the warrant of commitment that Lamirande was charged "with the crime of forgery by having, in his capacity of cashier of the branch of the Bank of Franch at Poictiers, on the 12th day of March, 1866, made false entries in the book of the said Bank, and thereby defrauded the said Bank of the sum of 700,000 francs." And we must observe that the facts here stated do not constitute the crime of forgery according to the English Criminal Law, with which we presume the Canadian Law is in harmony.

2. In answer to your Lordship's second question, we have observe that it appears to us to affect three classes of persons:—(1.) Those who obeyed the warrant of the Governor General. (2.) Those who made application for it. (3.) The Governor-General who issued it, and the legal officers who advised him to do so.

(1.) With respect to the first class, the warrant of the Governor-General was, it must be assumed, regular and formal, and the officers to whom it was addressed were therefore bound to obey it.

(2.) With respect to the second class, by which we mean the legal agents of the prosecution, whatever may be thought of their conduct in a moral point of view, we cannot say that there was anything technically speaking irregular in the extreme haste with which they conducted their proceedings, or that they have on this score rendered themselves amenable to penal consequences.

3. In the third class we include (a) the Governor-General, and (b) the Attorney-and Solicitor-General.

We understand that the Bank of France was represented by the two partners of the Attorney-General, and the Crown by Mr. Ramsay and the Deputy Clerk, Mr. Schiller. Further, that the person who advised the issuing of the warrant by the Governor-General was the Solicitor-General.

With respect to the Governor-General we are restrained, after a perusal of his despatch to Lord Carnarvon, and of the extract of his letter, dated the 12th of October, to say, that he appears to us to have acted with undue precipitation in issuing the warrant of extradition.

His Excellency had been apprised on the 16th or 17th of August that the advisers of Lamirande were prepared to insist that the case was not a proper one for extradition, and to apply for a writ of habeas corpus; and his Excellency had undertaken that full time should be allowed for these proceedings to be taken.

The prisoner was committed late (half-past 7) on the evening of the 22nd. Notice of application for the writ of habeas corpus was given on the morning of the 23rd. The petition for the writ was presented and argued on the 24th. The case was adjourned till the morning of the 25th. And we observe that a suggestion having been made in Court that the extradition might be proceeded with if the writ of habeas corpus did not issue on that day, the suggestion was promptly and indignantly repudiated "as a calumny" by the Crown prosecutor.

In this state of things, on the evening of the 24th, a warrant of extradition was signed by the Governor-General, and on the same night the prisoner was given up under that warrant to the Agents of the French Government.

The Governor-General states that he believes that "abundant time was allowed the prisoner to obtain the writ of habeas corpus if his Counsel had used ordinary diligence." We are quite unable to concur in this view.

With respect to the other official persons who wc think must have been cognizant of the proceedings in Court relative to the habeas corpus, we have not evidence before us that would warrant us in distributing among them the amount of blame which arises from the transaction.

We think upon the present statement that their conduct is open to grave censure, and requires further investigation.

With respect to any application being made to the French Government, we think it would be proper that a friendly representation should be made to them that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the warrant of extradition in this case was improperly granted during the pendency of legal proceedings on the part of the prisoner, which had for their object to show that the Governor-General had no jurisdiction under the Treaty, and the statute by which the Treaty was put into legal execution. And that Her Majesty's Government, therefore, hope that the French Government will consent to the prisoner being replaced in that position from which he was improperly removed. At the same time we are clearly of opinion that no demand or claim as of right can be made upon the French Government, to whom their own subject, accused of a grave crime, committed in their own territory, has been voluntarily delivered up by the English Government under the provisions of the Treaty subsisting between the two States.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 10.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 9, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that your Lordship had before you our Report of the 30th ultimo, respecting the case of Lamirande, when your Lordship received from the Earl of Carnarvon the further papers respecting it which were inclosed, together with the previous papers.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship any additional observations which they may induce us to make.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, transmitting the accompanying letter which has been received from the Colonial Office, inclosing further correspondence from Lord Monck respecting the case of Lamirande.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with reference to the course to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in communicating with the French Government as to Lamirande and his trial in France, we are of opinion that a communication should be made to the following effect:—That Her Majesty's Government have ascertained that the warrant of extradition was issued in ignorance that the prisoner had applied to the proper tribunal to order his discharge on the ground that his case was not within the provisions of the Treaty. It appears that while this point was actually under discussion before the Judges, who had adjourned the case to the following morning, the warrant was obtained from the Governor, wholly uninformed of these facts, and who would not have issued it had he been aware of them.

It should also be stated that in the opinion of the Judge before whom the matter was depending, the case of Lamirande did not come within the provisions of the Treaty, and that the prisoner ought not to have been delivered up; and, moreover, that he was carried away under the warrant notwithstanding the personal protest of the Judge.

It should also be stated that Her Majesty's Government were advised that there is good reason to believe that the opinion of the Judge was well founded in law, and that the prisoner ought not to have been delivered up.

We refer to the Report of the Law Officers (October 30) as to the nature of the communication which should be made to the French Government, and beg to repeat our opinion that care should be taken to place the application on the ground of a friendly request, and not on the footing of a claim of right.

We have not yet had sufficient time to report on the conduct of the Canadian officials, as explained in the voluminous papers laid before us since the last Report of the Law Officers.

The Solicitor-General and Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, November 14, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed to acquaint us that your Lordship has instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to apply to the French Government as suggested in our Report of the 30th October and 9th instant on the case of Lamirande: that a question, however, arises to which your Lordship directed him to request our attention. In the event of the French Government consenting to remit Lamirande to Canada, there to be dealt with according to the decision of the Court on his application for release under the writ of habeas corpus, and sending him to this country on his way to Canada in charge of a French police officer, may it not happen that a writ of habeas corpus, issued by one of the Judges in this country, on application made on behalf of the prisoner, may be served on the person in whose custody he is, and on the prisoner being brought before the Judge, and the case argued, his discharge ordered by the Judge? How is such a contingency to be met? The French Government would send the prisoner to this country on the faith of no impediment being offered to his being conveyed to Canada, and yet he might be interrupted on the road, and set free by process issuing from one of the Courts of this country:—and that your Lordship would be glad if we would report to your Lordship on this subject at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that in the event of Lamirande being brought to this country a writ of habeas corpus might be obtained from the Courts or a Judge here, with a view to his discharge from custody, and that he might in that way obtain his release before reaching Canada. Indeed, after his arrival in Canada, the writ might equally be applied for to the Court of Queen's Bench in England, although it is probable that the prisoner would prefer applying to Judge Drummond, who has already decided in his favour, and would no doubt at once discharge him.

We think the French Government should be fully apprised that the effect of the prisoner being remitted to Canada would almost inevitably be that he would obtain his release, and that the same result would probably attend an application to the Courts in England in the event of his being brought into this country.

No. 79.

The Solicitor-General and Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 1st, 2nd, 6th, and 7th instant, transmitting various papers and correspondence respecting the case of Lamirande, and requesting that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the additional papers submitted to us in this case furnish some information of importance which was not before the Law Officers when they made their first Report. The three most material points which present themselves for consideration appear to be: 1st. Whether Lamirande could properly be delivered up under the Treaty? 2nd. Whether the Governor-General was blameable for issuing the warrant? 3rd. Whether his legal advisers or any of the authorities were to blame?

1st. We are of opinion that the case of Lamirande was not brought within the provisions of the Extradition Treaty, and that he ought not to have been delivered up, although Lord Monck was advised that the case did come within the Extradition Statute.

2nd. With respect to the Governor-General, we think that his present explanation places beyond all doubt the fact of his ignorance that at the time he signed the writ, proceedings for obtaining the habeas corpus had been taken. We give him credit for having acted in the most perfect good faith. At the same time we continue to think that it is much to be regretted that after the intimation which he received on the 17th of August of the intention of the prisoner to dispute the legality of the proceeding, and the assurance which he then gave that time should be allowed for this purpose, that a little longer time should not have been allowed, or at least that some inquiry was not made by his Lordship as to what was taking place at Montreal. It is a very grave matter that a prisoner, though a foreigner, should have been deprived of the constitutional mode of obtaining a judicial decision on the legality of his imprisonment.

3rd. We find no evidence upon which any blame can fairly be imputed to the Canadian Attorney-General, though the fact that his partner was acting for the French Government in the case has not unnaturally given rise to suspicion and observations. With respect to Mr. Ramsay, who acted for the Attorney-General, having regard to the statement which Mr. Ramsay has made, and the explanation which he has now offered, we think that he is not liable to the charge of improper conduct. But if it should hereafter appear that either on the 23rd or the 24th of August he was in communication with the Solicitor-General upon the subject, or took any part in directing the issuing or in the execution of the warrant, we should entertain a different opinion. We think also that further explanation is required as to the officer having parted with the warrant whilst the case was still under investigation before the Judge.

With respect to the Solicitor-General we do not find sufficient explanation of his conduct in taking the warrant to the Governor-General and inducing him to sign it. We must observe also that the explanation as to the fact of the warrant having been sealed at Ottawa on the 23rd, and taken by the Solicitor-General to the Governor-General, and signed by him at Quebec on the forenoon of the 24th, is not satisfactory, more especially when it is remembered that it was, or ought to have been known, that twenty-four hours' notice was required for the application for a writ of habeas corpus, and that the Judge, by the Canadian law, is, we believe, allowed forty-eight hours to give his decision. In other respects we desire to adhere to the views expressed in the first Report of the Law Officers to your Lordship. There seems to have been throughout an undue zeal on the part of some of the authorities to deliver up the prisoner to the French Government, though we have no doubt that they were actuated by the desire that a great criminal should not be allowed to escape from Canada as he had already done from France and the United States, and that the Treaty engagements of Great Britain with France should be satisfactorily fulfilled.

NOTE.—In consequence of the absence of the Attorney-General, on account of his re-election, he has had no opportunity of reading this Report, but we have reason to believe that he would concur in it; and as the case is very pressing, we have thought it better to forward it without waiting for the signature of the Attorney-General.

No. 80.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 15, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's two letters of yesterday's date, the one stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a letter from Lord Monck, which had been received that day from the Colonial Office, inclosing the copy of an affidavit in Lamirande's case referred to in a previous despatch from the Governor-General, and the other transmitting, for our consideration, a copy of a despatch received that morning from Earl Cowley, respecting a conversation with the French Minister for Foreign Affairs on the same subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these further papers, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the affidavit made by the French Inspector-Principal of Police, and that it does not affect the Reports which we have had the honour to make on this subject.

That with respect to the conversation between Earl Cowley and M. de Moustier, we have to observe that it appears to us impossible to deny the force of the reasoning of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs.

It must be admitted that if the situations were reversed, and the restoration of a French subject given up under the Treaty of Extradition, and about to undergo trial before an English tribunal, were demanded or requested by the French of the English Government, that the latter would be constrained to reply that the Executive Government had no power to remove a prisoner from the judicial authority to which he had been submitted, or in any way to stop the course of justice with respect to him, by whatever error on the part of the French authority he might originally have been placed within the jurisdiction of the Court.

We think, therefore, that the refusal of the French Government to deliver up Lamirande ought not to be considered as affording any ground of offence whatever to the Government of Her Majesty.

We have, &c.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—We have thought it better not to delay this Report for the return of the Attorney-General, who is engaged in his re-election.

No. 81.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 16.)

My Lord, Temple, November 16, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating, that it being apparently essential, with reference to the case of M. Lamirande, that Lord Cowley should have immediately before him a distinct legal definition of the crime of forgery, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform you, at our earliest convenience, in what manner that crime may be defined, and the bearing of that definition on the use of the word in the Extradition Treaty with France, of which he inclosed a copy, and also upon the statement made by the French Consul-General in his letter and in the deposition of the French police officer Mélin, setting forth the crime of which Lamirande was accused.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the original "mandat d'arrêt" does not appear among the papers, having probably been returned to the Consul-General according to his request.

In obedience to the commands contained in Mr. Hammond's letter, we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That forgery, by the common law of England, may be defined to be the fraudulently counterfeiting any written document, in whole or in part, or altering or adding to it and making it falsely appear to be the genuine writing or instrument of some other person with intent to defraud or prejudice another.

That by one of the statutes for consolidating the criminal law, viz., "The 24th and 25th Vict., c. 98," a variety of cognate acts are defined and classed under the general head of forgery, and by various special statutes the counterfeiting or falsification of various public and other documents is also declared to be forgery.

That we think the term forgery in the Extradition Statute would include all these cases.

That a mere false statement in writing which does not purport to be the writing of another person, is not forgery: for instance, if a man fraudulently signs the name of A.B., without authority, to a bill of exchange, it is a forgery; but if he fraudulently signs it in his own name "per procuration of A.B.," having no authority, it is only a false statement and a fraud, but not forgery; so if he makes a false entry in a banker's pass-book as if it were and purporting to be the banker's entry, with a view to defraud, it is forgery; but if he makes a false entry in his own book, and purporting to be his own entry, with the like intent, it is a fraud but is not forgery.

That, according to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, a forgery, to come within the French Extradition Treaty and Statute, must be what would be considered forgery according to the Law of England as well as of France, though this opinion seems to be rather questionable.

That upon the statements made in the letter of the French Consul-General and in the depositions of the French police officer Mélin, it would appear that Lamirande was not charged with or guilty of forgery, or counterfeiting the entry of any other person, but that he was charged with embezzlement and with making fraudulent and false entries in his own books and which would not, in our opinion, be forgery according to the Law of England, within the meaning of the Extradition Statute.

That the original "mandat d'arrêt" was, in the papers formerly submitted to us, alleged to have been stolen by the person who represented Lamirande at the inquiry at New York.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 19.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 19, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request our opinion on the following point, viz.:—The charge made against M. Lamirande by the French Consul-General in Canada was that of "falsifying his books and bordereau;" but if these books are the ledgers of the Bank of France entrusted to his keeping, and not M. Lamirande's private accounts, would that bring him within the accusation of forgery?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the falsifying by Lamirande of the books and bordereau or ledgers of the Bank of France, entrusted to and kept by him, would not be forgery according to the laws of England.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 18, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th December instant, stating that with reference to the letter of the Law Officers of the 19th ultimo, and to previous correspondence respecting the case of M. Lamirande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris inclosing a copy of a letter from M. Treite forwarding the "compte-rendu" of the trial and containing observations upon this case; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the "arrêt" or decree of the Cour d'Assises, so far as it holds or proceeds upon the assumption that the question of the legality of the extradition of Lamirande could not be discussed before that Court, as stated by M. Treite in his letter to Lord Cowley, was right, and in harmony with the principle that would prevail in the Courts of this country if a person delivered to our authorities by a foreign State were being tried here. And we beg leave further to report that neither the trial nor the sentence upon Lamirande by the French Tribunals appear to us to call for any representation from Her Majesty's Government to the French Government.

Sir,

M. TREITE, in his letter to Lord Cowley of the 11th December, with reference to the case of Dermenon's extradition proceedings, refers to "la fameuse circulaire de la Chancellerie du 5 Avril, 1841, laquelle met en relief tous les points de la pratique de l'extradition en France."

The Law Officers would be glad if they could be furnished with a copy of this document with a view to advising further on Lamirande's case.

I should be also glad if you would do me the favour of sending me a former report of M. Treite, in which he states (according to my recollection) that Lamirande was not tried for the crime of "faux," but for larceny or robbery.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 8, 1866.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with Earl Russell's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd June, 1865, stating that he was directed by his Lordship to transmit to us, for any observations which we might have to offer thereupon, the accompanying Bill, which it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce into Parliament, for the better suppression of the Slave Trade, when carried on in vessels not entitled to the protection of any State or nation.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add that Earl Russell would be glad to be favoured with our opinion upon this Bill at our earliest convenience.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to refer us to that letter, and to state that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion upon the Bill in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That when this Bill was referred to us by Earl Russell in June last, we felt it necessary to make it the subject of much more deliberate consideration than was possible at so advanced a stage of the then session of Parliament.

Having now had time for such consideration, we desire to state that there appear to us to be very grave objections to the principle of this Bill. If slave-trading, in a vessel not justly entitled to claim the protection of the flag of any State or nation, ought to be deemed piracy by the general law of nations, such a Bill as this is needless; for piracy, by whomsoever committed, is already punishable by our laws. But if (which has hitherto been the doctrine generally maintained by jurists), slave-trading is not piracy by international law, we see no principle on which acts done beyond British jurisdiction, by persons who are not British subjects, in ships which are not British ships, can be made felonies or misdemeanours cognizable by British law. In the nature of things, and upon fundamental views of international jurisprudence, such persons cannot be made subject, in respect of such acts, to the criminal legislation of Great Britain; and a statute declaring that their acts, although done beyond the limits of our authority, shall be "deemed" felonies or misdemeanours, would be a mere legal fiction; however unavoidable it might be for our Judges and Courts to act upon it.

Your Lordship is aware of the doubts which have so often been expressed, and by persons of high authority, as to the principle of the statute commonly called the "Aberdeen Act." The justification offered for that statute was, that Brazil had, by a perpetual Article of a Treaty (in other respects temporary) given this country a right to deal with her subjects engaged in the Slave Trade as pirates. This justification, however, could not be offered for the present Bill, which does not proceed upon the ground that the foreigners against whom it proposes to legislate are pirates, either jure gentium, or by virtue of any Treaty by which they are bound; on the contrary, it proposes to deal with them as guilty of a "felony," or "misdemeanour," i.e., of offences to be created and defined by a municipal law of Great Britain.

For these reasons we feel obliged to express an opinion unfavourable to the introduction of this measure into Parliament, which renders it unnecessary for us to advert particularly to any matters of detail; though the clauses of the Bill might, in some respects, be improved by modification, if it were introduced.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 20, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 9th instant, with its inclosures, from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, requesting to be favoured with his Lordship's opinion in regard to the question raised by the Board of Customs as to whether that Department should, in times when war is being carried on between foreign countries in amity with Her Majesty, watch and report on the construction of vessels in this country, which are likely to be employed in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be fit and proper for Her Majesty's Government to adopt in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the burden of procuring procuring such primâ facie evidence as would warrant my Lords in ordering the seizure of a vessel lies generally upon the agent of the foreign State giving information against such vessel. But this position is quite consistent with requiring the Custom-house officers, during the time of war between foreign States, one or all of whom are in amity with Her Majesty, to watch and report on the construction of vessels likely to be employed in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

It will be a matter for the discretion of Her Majesty's Government, in each case, whether the further duty of collecting evidence and depositions shall or shall not be cast upon the officers of the Custom-house.

But it is to be recollected that in all such cases the vindication of our own laws is the matter in question; and that the offence is one against the State, which it becomes Her Majesty's Government to endeavour to prevent, and to discover and bring to justice (when not prevented) by the same means which would be resorted to for the repression and detection of any other offences against the laws of Customs and navigation which might concern the domestic interests of this country alone.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating, that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposed to address to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and the Secretaries of State for Home, Colonial, War and Indian Affairs, on the subject of the neutrality of Her Majesty in the war which has broken out in Europe; and that he was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the same might properly be sent; and that he was also to request that we would prepare the draft of a Proclamation to be issued by Her Majesty to the same effect; and that to facilitate our doing so, he inclosed the Proclamation issued in 1859, altered so as to be adapted to the present case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the inclosed draft letter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the inclosed draft letter is proper to be sent; and that the draft Proclamation, which we have prepared as desired, is proper to be published in the "London Gazette."

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 22.)

Doctors' Commons, January 19, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 15th instant, from Mr. S. Williams, respecting the proceedings of the Hamburgh authorities as regards Mr. C. Dodgshun, a person born at Hamburgh, but who, by descent, claims to be a British subject, and is resident in England; and who is now called upon to serve as a soldier in Hamburgh; and he was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government should interfere, and if so, on what ground.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I beg leave to refer to my Report in the similar case of Bosdet, on the 22nd of September, 1863.

Charles Dodgshun was born in Hamburgh, of a British father, who had become a burgher of Hamburgh.

I am afraid that Her Majesty's Government cannot gainsay the right of the Hamburgh authorities to treat him, so far as their jurisdiction is concerned, as a citizen, or to sequestrate his property in Hamburgh, though they can have no right to touch the property of his brother and sister.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna (No. 39, Commercial), respecting applications that have been made by Austrian merchants to be furnished with British Consular certificates for the protection of goods ordered by British subjects, and forwarded to England by the German railways; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Lord Bloomfield on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Lord Bloomfield may be instructed to the effect that Her Majesty's Consul at Vienna may grant certificates that goods are the property of British subjects when he is satisfied that they are really and bonâ fide such, but that in each case he should most clearly and distinctly apprise the applicant for the certificate that the granting of it does not in any manner bind Her Majesty's Government to interfere hereafter on behalf of the owner of such goods with any foreign Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received July 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that the Secretaries of the different foreign Legations accredited to the Diet of Frankfort who remained in that city after the departure of their Ministers with the Diet on the approach of the Prussian army having represented to the Prussian Commandant in an official note the apprehension felt by their countrymen lest they should suffer from the measures of bombardment and pillage with which the city was threatened, were informed in writing by the Prussian Commandant General Roeder that their respective countrymen had nothing to fear from the measures he might have to take towards the city of Frankfort. Various telegrams relating to those measures were also inclosed. That last night, however, a telegram was received from Her Majesty's Secretary of Legation at Frankfort, from which we should see that if the contributions to be levied on Frankfort are not at once paid, it is intended by the Prussians to isolate the town, and not to allow either persons, merchandize, letters or telegrams to enter or leave it. That Her Majesty's Secretary of Legation says that those measures will cause British merchants to suffer, and asks for instructions. And Mr. Egerton was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government can take any, and if so what, measures for the protection of British interests at Frankfort.

1866

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the general principle applicable to cases of this kind is, that the foreign subject of a neutral Government who, during a time of war, continues his residence in the country of a belligerent must submit to the inconveniences incident to any operation which the belligerent thinks necessary for the prosecution of the war; that he is, however, entitled, generally speaking, to the option of leaving the place which is about to become the scene of warlike operations; and if this option be refused by the belligerent, it is at the risk of his being holden liable by the Government of the foreigner to any compensation which subsequent losses inflicted upon the foreigner by the belligerent troops may render it just to demand.

In the present case it would seem that the neutral received the assurance of the belligerent that "he had nothing to fear from the measures which he (the belligerent) might have to take towards the city" in which the neutral was resident. These words are clear as a promise of actual safety for person and property; but whether they have any further operation would depend somewhat on the precise communication to which they were an answer, which communication we have not before us.

We think, however, that a foundation is laid for a remonstrance by the Representatives of the neutral Governments against the effect of such a measure of hostility as is now threatened upon their subjects, whereby they may be exposed to an amount of inconvenience and loss against which, under the previous declaration of the belligerent they may have reasonably expected to be secured, and from the operation of which, therefore, they had taken no steps to withdraw themselves. Much must of course depend upon the actual circumstances; but although we recommend that such a remonstrance as we have suggested be made, nevertheless if it should turn out that the persons and property of neutral subjects are secured from actual injury, and the measure of "isolation" be of short duration, we do not, as at present advised, think that the neutral can treat this operation of the belligerent as an unlawful exercise of his rights.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence as noted in the margin,* respecting the seizure of Mr. Coore and his party, and the plunder of their yacht by brigands near Dragomestre.

The draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens on that subject was inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this draft into consideration, together with the other papers, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the same is right and proper, more particularly with reference to the question raised in regard to the plunder of the yacht.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive a report upon this case in the course of Wednesday then next, as a messenger would be dispatched from the Foreign Office to Athens on the following day.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Hammond's letter having been delivered in the afternoon of Tuesday last, it was not possible for us to report on this case as soon as your Lordship desired.

Lincoln's Inn, January 8, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an instruction which, founded on our Report of the 26th ultimo, has been addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 2, January 5), on the question of the Convention respecting British Judgments in Ionian suits.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that this instruction had not yet been forwarded to Mr. Erskine, but was intended for the messenger which leaves the Foreign Office on Thursday next.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to inclose the accompanying telegram dated January 5, which had just been received from Mr. Erskine, from which we would perceive that the Greek Government decline to adopt the first clause of the declaration inclosed in the accompanying draft which was addressed to him on the 17th of October last (No. 114), founded upon our Report of the 29th of September; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers again into our consideration, and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience our opinion as to the answer that should be returned to Mr. Erskine's telegram.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it will be proper to send the proposed instruction to Mr. Erskine, and in answer to his telegram to state that, in the absence of such a Convention as that proposed, Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the competency of any Hellenic

Court, by any form of proceeding in which both the parties concerned have not appeared and been heard before such Court, to assume any appellate or other jurisdiction over a sentence pronounced by Her Majesty's Consular Court at Constantinople, before the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, in favour of any non-Hellenic plaintiff or plaintiffs against an Ionian defendant; and that Her Majesty's Government would regard any such attempt, or any subsequent refusal of the benefit of the British Consular Judgment by the Courts of Greece, on the ground of such proceedings, to the party who obtained it in the British Court as a violation of the principles of international comity. That Her Majesty's Government would, therefore, regard an acceptance by the Hellenic Government of the principle of the first Supplementary Article proposed by Her Majesty's Government as indispensable, not only to any Convention which is to be of practical value or use (as it is understood that some ex parte proceedings contrary to that principle have actually been taken at Athens), but to a good understanding between the two countries on this subject. That Her Majesty's Government, however, do not object to limit the Article to those cases in which the successful party before the British Consular Court had not himself, after the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, become a Greek subject, and to those in which (whether a Greek subject or not) he had not by appearing and defending himself before an Hellenic tribunal waived the objection, and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that tribunal.

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, February 6, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence,* together with a copy of the Treaty between this country and Greece therein referred to, respecting a question asked by Sir H. D. Wolff, whether the acceptance of office under the British Crown will entail the absolute forfeiture of a pension obtained under that Treaty from the Greek Government, on account of services performed by such pensioner in the Ionian Islands, while those islands were under the Protectorate of Her Majesty; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, looking to all the circumstances which attended the making of the Treaty, and the equitable construction of it, we think that the IInd Article cannot have been intended to deprive persons accepting office under Her Majesty of the Ionian pension, except during the time when such office was retained. But it would be impossible to contend that this construction of the Article is so clear as to enable Her Majesty's Government to enforce it, as such, upon Greece, the other party to this international contract.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would again take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our early convenience, with such observations as we may have to offer on Mr. Erskine's further despatch now transmitted to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have so often had occasion to report to your Lordship on this subject, that we do not think it necessary to repeat the reasons which led us to a different conclusion from that at which the Greek authorities have arrived.

It is sufficient to refer to our Report of the 8th of January last, and to say, that we can hardly suppose the authorities at Athens can gravely mean to claim, independently of any Convention and legislation following thereon, a jurisdiction for their Courts to review, upon appeal, the judgments of the British Consular Court at Constantinople, except in cases in which both the parties to such judgments (i.e., the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant), have become subject, by reason of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, to Hellenic jurisdiction. If the claim is so limited, we have already advised that the Ist Article of the proposed Supplementary Convention may be so modified as to leave undisturbed any anterior proceedings of Greek tribunals in cases in which both parties were subject, or submitted, to Hellenic jurisdiction.

In all other cases, we think it must be distinctly understood that any claim of Hellenic jurisdiction over British sentences, by way of appeal, will be regarded by Her Majesty as inadmissible, upon general principles of international law. We should trust, however, that, with the explanations and qualifications suggested in our former Report, the Greek Government will no longer object to the propositions of Her Majesty's Government.

If the negotiations should fail, we think it might be well to inform the Plaintiff in the suit of "Rodocanachi v. Verissi," of the resource which is supposed to be open to him by the Hellenic law; and it will be for him to exercise his discretion as to whether or not he will avail himself of it.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 26.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, May 15, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th of February, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for such observations as we may have to offer thereupon, the accompanying further despatch from Mr. Erskine (No. 74, April 17), relative to the continued refusal of the Greek Government to accept the first clause of the Declaration proposed to be attached to the Convention respecting British judgments in Ionian suits. The more recent correspondence was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have already stated in our former Reports all the reasons why this claim of the Greek authorities appears to us to be at variance with sound principles of international law and justice. We can only express our regret that they persist in maintaining what seems to us an indefensible position. We think it will be of no advantage to conclude any Convention as long as this position is maintained; and we think it will only be proper to make it distinctly understood by the Greek Government that Her Majesty's Government absolutely decline to recognize the competency of any Hellenic Court to assume jurisdiction over MM. Rodocanachi and Kipula, or to entertain appeals against the judgments of a British Court in favour of these parties, on the ground of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece after the dates of those judgments.

It will be desirable at the same time to make the communications suggested in our former Report to these parties.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received July 7.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 6, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to that part of our Reports of the 6th of February and 15th of May, respecting the proposed Ionian Judgments Convention with Greece, which relates to the cases of Messrs. Copello and Rodocanachi, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters from those gentlemen, and from Mr. Routh, preferring a claim upon Her Majesty's Government in consequence of the non-execution of the sentence pronounced in Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople on the 30th of May, 1864, in the case of Copello and Rodocanachi v. Verissi.

Mr. Hammond likewise transmitted to us a memorandum on this matter, together with the draft of the letter, founded on our above-mentioned Reports, which was addressed to Mr. Routh on the 19th ultimo (May), informing him of the intention of Her Majesty's Government not to proceed further in the negotiations with the Greek Government on the subject of the proposed Convention, and pointing out the course which it was now open to Messrs. Copello and Rodocanachi to pursue; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the letters now referred to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Government ought, in reply to Mr. Routh, to decline all responsibility whatever for the claims to which his letter refers. He may be informed that although Her Majesty's Government would very gladly have come to such a definite arrangement with the Greek Government as might have insured a proper and just treatment of these cases, they cannot for a moment admit that any suitors in the British Consular Court at Constantinople, who had obtained judgments therein against Ionian defendants, have any right to complain of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, without special provision concerning such claims in the Act of Cession. The effect of that transfer (according to sound principles of international law) was only that the successful plaintiffs, if they desired afterwards to obtain the benefit of those judgments before the new tribunals to which the defendants had now become amenable, might be obliged to do so upon the same terms, and with the same advantages or disadvantages, as in other cases, in which the benefit of foreign judgments may have to be sought before the Courts of a country different from that in which they have been pronounced.

If in the result the Greek tribunals should refuse to do justice to these parties in the ordinary course of the administration of Greek law, there may possibly be ground for seeking redress against the Hellenic Government; and Her Majesty's Government are aware that, in our opinion, the Greek tribunals ought not to be recognized as entitled to assume any proper appellate jurisdiction in these cases at the instance of Ionian defendants in the British Consular Courts, against plaintiffs not themselves subject (and who have not voluntarily submitted) to Greek jurisdiction. But the possibility of injustice being done by the Greek Courts in particular cases could not make it the duty of Her Majesty's Government to abstain from concluding a territorial arrangement, recommended by general reasons of European policy, until all judgments obtained in the British Consular Courts against Ionians had been either executed or specially provided for, much less to insist upon treating as still amenable to the compulsory process of our extra-territorial Courts in Turkey, persons who, by reason of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, had ceased to be subject to British authority.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 12, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th of October last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Corfu (No. 46) relative to the liability of British subjects domiciled as Ionian citizens in that island to be drawn for the conscription, and to the question of whether they can evade it by renouncing the Ionian naturalization acquired by themselves or their fathers during the British protectorate of the island; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon these points.

We are also favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 17th of that month he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Corfu (No. 50), together with a copy of the Treaty referred to therein, upon the subject of the liability of British subjects domiciled in the Ionian Islands to be drawn for the conscription; and to request that we would take this despatch into our consideration, together with the papers already before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be a reasonable and just concession on the part of the Greek Government to allow British subjects, naturalized during the Protectorate of Great Britain, to have the option now of renouncing their Ionian and resuming their British nationality, provided this option be exercised without delay, and put on formal record as soon as possible.

But inasmuch as no stipulation to this effect was made in the Treaty by which Great Britain renounced the Protectorate, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government can properly demand, as a matter of right, that such an option should be conceded to them by the Government of Greece.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 12, 1866

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, setting forth the proceedings of the Greek Government in regard to certain pensioners who were in the service of the Ionian Government at the time of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, and also in reference to certain other persons. A copy of the Convention of March 1864 was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship as to how far Her Majesty's Government would, in my opinion, be justified in instructing Mr. Erskine to interfere in the several cases referred to in his despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That for the due solution of all these questions it is necessary to bear in mind the general principle contained in Article VII of the Treaty of the 29th March, 1864, namely, "That the King of the Hellenes engages to take upon himself all the engagements and contracts lawfully concluded by the Government of the United States of the Ionian Islands, or in their name by the Protecting Power of those islands, conformably to the Constitution of the Ionian Islands, whether with foreign Governments, with companies and associations, or with private individuals; and promises to fulfil the said engagements and contracts fully and completely as if they had been concluded by His Majesty or by the Hellenic Government."

With respect to the first case, I agree with Mr. Consul Saunders that this Article is applicable to the case of the discharged policemen. Under the IVth Article of the Act regulating the pensions of the constabulary force in the Ionian Islands, they would be entitled to the pensions which they now claim, as they would also have been if their services had not been continued for the good of the State at the time of the cession; and I think that Her Majesty's Government ought, in the circumstances stated, to assist them in obtaining what is justly their due.

With respect to the second case, namely, that which is described as tithe commutation, in which Count Gerasimo Dalladecima is interested, I think that Mr. Erskine should be instructed to insist upon the immediate payment of the annuity.

With respect to the third case, namely, that of the Prior of the Convent of Catharas, in the Island of Ithaca, it appears to me clear that the former Government of the Ionian Islands had by a most formal contract conceded to him the enjoyment of all the rights and privileges incident to the office of Prior of this Convent during the term of his natural life. That this contract belongs to the category of those engagements which Greece is bound by the Treaty to fulfil, and against the breach of which the Prior is certainly, in the last resort, entitled to invoke the protection of Great Britain as the principal guardian of the Treaty by which his rights were secured.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received June 12.)

Doctors' Commons, June 12, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Hamburgh (No. 36), relative to the presence of Prussian gun-boats in the Elbe; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship at my earliest convenience with my opinion as to the question of the neutrality of that river in the event of hostilities between Prussia and Austria, which is touched upon in the latter part of Mr. Ward's despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it may be necessary to observe a distinction between different kinds of warlike operations in the Elbe; for instance, as to the capture of or combat with ships and the institution of a blockade. As to the latter operation, I must observe that our Prize Courts, during the continental war, held that the blockade of the Elbe and the Weser necessarily affected the neutral cities connected with these rivers.

"I have had," Lord Stowell says, "frequent occasion to observe how severely the neutral cities connected with the Weser and the Elbe are pressed upon by the blockade of those rivers. At the same time, it is my duty to apply to those operations of blockade the principles that belong to that branch of the law of nations generally, and by which only such measures can be maintained. The principles themselves cannot differ, although it will undoubtedly be the disposition of the Court to alleviate the situation of those towns as much as possible by attending to any distinctions that can be advanced in their favour not inconsistent with the sound construction of the general principles of law. A blockade imposed on the Weser must in its nature be held to affect the commerce of Bremen; because if the commerce of all the towns situated on that river is allowed, it would only be to say in more indirect language that the blockade itself did not exist." (The "Maria," 6 Robinson, 203; the "Spes" and the "Irene," 5 Robinson, 81.)

It might be difficult to avoid the application of these principles to a blockade by Prussia of Holstein in possession of Austria. It does not, however, follow from these decisions, which certainly carried the belligerent's right to a great length, and to which I have thought it right to draw your Lordship's attention, that the capture or combat

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin relative to the claim for compensation which has been put forward by a Mecklenburg subject, named Weckmann, residing at Cape Haitien, in consequence of the losses he sustained during the bombardment by Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog" in October last, and also a letter, with its inclosure, which have been received from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, to whom the matter was referred; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with the former papers upon this subject, therewith transmitted to us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the merits of M. Opinion of Dr. Twiss.

THE proceedings of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog" against the vessels of the Insurrectionary Government in the harbour of Cape Haitien must be taken to have been in the nature of reprisals, not of war, and accordingly those proceedings did not constitute a state of war, under which the property of foreigners residing for purposes of trade within the town which was in possession of the Insurrectionary Government might have become the property subject to the exercise of belligerent right on the part of the British Commander, and to be treated as enemy's property.

Under this view of the case, as reprisals ought to be strictly confined to the property of such persons as during a state of peace would have the status of subjects of the Government from which satisfaction is required, and for the purpose of this case it is immaterial by what right the Insurrectionary Government held actual possession of Cape Haitien, it was the duty of the officer of the Power exacting satisfaction from that Government to take care that the property of the subjects of any foreign Power who might be engaged in lawful trade within the town should not suffer by its acts of reprisal.

Such being the principles of public law applicable to this case, it would appear from the papers submitted for my perusal that it had been the original intention of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship to confine his acts of reprisal to measures which were calculated to cause no damage to the property of merchants within the town of Cape Haitien, but that owing to the circumstance of Her Majesty's ship having unexpectedly taken the ground on a shoal within the harbour he found himself obliged in self-defence to fire in the direction of the town, and so unintentionally brought about the destruction of the property of M. Weckmann, a Mecklenburg subject. Under these circumstances, although the suffering inflicted upon M. Weckmann may have been unavoidable on the part of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship, and there may have been no intentional violation of public law on his part, the Grand Ducal Government has just grounds, in my opinion, for seeking at the hands of the British Government compensation for the damage caused to M. Weckmann's property by the fire of Her Majesty's ship.

with vessels in the waters of Hamburgh or Hanover would not be a violation of neutral rights. I am of opinion that Hanover and Hamburgh, being neutral, would be justified in maintaining that no belligerent operation should take place in the waters which are within their respective jurisdictions, that is to say, within those limits to which in time of peace their civil jurisdiction has been admitted to extend.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received August 4.)

Doctors' Commons, August 4, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Hamburgh, on the subject of the claim to exemption from military service in the forces belonging to that city, of Alfred Bosdet, who is stated to be the son of a Hamburgh citizen, but to have been born in Jersey, and to be now permanently resident in Scotland; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the claim of this individual to exemption is well founded.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That Alfred Bosdet appears to be the son of a native citizen of Hamburgh, now a domiciled merchant in that town. The municipal law of Hamburgh treats the son of such a citizen as a subject, and places him, so far as its jurisdiction extends, under the obligations of a citizen, one of which is to serve in the Hamburgh military force. The fact that Alfred Bosdet was born in England confers on him, according to the law of this country, the character of an English subject; and there arises, or may arise, in these cases a conflict of jurisdiction: but as the law of England also considers the son of a native subject, wherever he is born, as an English citizen, the English Government cannot fairly complain of the law of Hamburgh, which is in this respect the same; nor can it interfere with the execution of that law within the town of Hamburgh. I must express my opinion that while Mr. Ward may be instructed to represent to the Hamburgh authorities that Alfred Bosdet has become an English subject, and to ask as a matter of comity that his name may therefore be taken off the military list, Mr. Ward cannot be properly instructed to insist as a matter of right upon this being done.

your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with my opinion upon the merits of the case, as it involves a general principle in which all maritime States are interested.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is a cardinal maxim of international jurisprudence that all public acts having the force of covenants between States should, in case of reasonable doubt, receive a liberal and equitable construction founded on a consideration of all the circumstances which can fairly illustrate the intention of the parties to them.

The Declaration of Paris, so far as it has the force of a covenant, must be taken to mean that each subscriber parted with a belligerent right which he possessed, on the faith that in any future war he would still be, so far as this concession was concerned, upon equal terms with his antagonist. But this would not be the case if, when a subscriber was at war with a non-subscriber, the latter exercised a power of capturing enemies' goods in neutral bottoms, from which the former Power was restrained; for it is provided by the Declaration that the belligerent status of a non-subscriber remains unaffected by the Declaration. In this case, therefore, the Declaration, so far as it was a covenant, does not apply. This construction, in itself plainly equitable, derives also force from the discussion which accompanied the preparation, and preceded the signing of the Declaration.

It appeared, I think, in the papers recently submitted to me from the Foreign Office, that your Lordship expressed yourself at the Conference to this effect, and that the opposite opinion was not maintained.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Turin (No. 1, January 7, 1866), requesting instructions in regard to the question whether he would be competent to grant a certificate required by the provisions of the 103rd Article of the New Italian Civil Code, referring to the marriage of a foreigner within the Italian dominions, and, if so, what formalities should be gone through before issuing such a document; and to request that we would take this paper into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Colnaghi on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the proper Italian authorities would be satisfied with the certificate of Her Majesty's Consul (upon whom the Legislature has devolved a certain authority with respect to marriages of British subjects abroad), we see no reason why he should not, on proper application being made to him, grant it. The form of such a certificate might properly, we think, be as follows:—

"I, , Her Majesty's Consul at , in the Kingdom of Italy, do hereby certify, that, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, there is no impediment by the law of Great Britain, to the marriage of A. B. with C. D., resident in ".

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant, expressing our opinion that Her Majesty's Consul at Turin might properly issue certificates in order to meet the requirements of the Italian Civil Code as regards marriages of foreigners in Italy, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that your Lordship is of opinion that Her Majesty's Consuls would not be warranted in issuing such certificates unless upon reasonable proof that there is no ground why they should not give them, and that your Lordship accordingly proposes to instruct Mr. Consul Colnaghi to require parties applying to him for such certificates to go through the form required by the 6th section of the "Marriages in foreign countries facilitating Act." A Draft instruction, in this sense, was also inclosed.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to transmit a despatch upon the same subject from Her Majesty's Minister at Florence (No. 39), to whom your Lordship proposes to send analogous instructions, and was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the accompanying drafts to Mr. Elliot and to Mr. Colnaghi are right and proper. WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, received from Her Majesty's Minister at Florence (No. 24), respecting the case of a young man named Philip Smith, who is the son of an Englishman domiciled at Bologna, and whom the Italian Government hold liable to the military conscription and for whose exemption Mr. Elliot has made an unsuccessful application to the Italian Government, founded upon the view taken by Her Majesty's Government in previous cases, the correspondence respecting which was annexed for our information,[*] and has already formed the subject of reference to Her Majesty's Advocate-General; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed thereupon to Her Majesty's Minister at Florence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the case of Philip Smith is rightly distinguished by the Italian Government from the former cases of Hammet and Stuart.

There is no doubt that it was competent to the Italian Government to make the regulation respecting foreigners which is contained in the new code, and under which the case of Philip Smith falls.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammonds's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith the accompanying letter from Messrs. Walton and Bubb, bringing to your Lordship's notice the case of M. Rosario Messina who, in the year 1851, appears to have become, by virtue of an Ordinance of the Government of Malta, a naturalized subject of Her Majesty, but who, while proceeding on a journey from thence to Rome, has been arrested at Catania, and his claim to the privileges and protection of a British subject ignored by the Italian authorities on the ground that his naturalization applied only so long as he was resident in the Island of Malta: and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Walton's and Bubb's representation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the representation of Messrs. Walton and Bubb should be answered to the following effect:—That the rule of international and public law applicable to cases of this description is, that a person who, owing a natural allegiance to the country of his birth, is naturalized in another country, is under the protection of the Government of the latter country in all places which are not within the jurisdiction of the country of his original allegiance. That the exception to this rule is to be found in cases in which the country of the original allegiance allows her subjects to put off their allegiance and become the subjects of another country; this is not alleged to be the law of the Kingdom of Italy.

Her Majesty's Government are, therefore, of opinion that the Italian authorities have acted as English authorities would have acted in the like circumstance.

Lincoln's Inn, Jnne 12, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters dated the 5th instant, from the Marquis d'Azeglio, inquiring as to the position in which ships belonging to the Italian Government, of the two classes mentioned, would be in British ports in the event of war breaking out in which Italy should be a belligerent; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Marquis d'Azeglio.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, as bearing upon this question, he was directed by your Lordship to refer us to our Report of the 30th January last, therewith inclosed, in connection with the hostilities between Spain and Peru; and, further, to transmit to us the accompanying letter, and its inclosures, received from the Admiralty, dated the 5th instant, together with the letter from the Foreign Office of the 26th of February last therein referred to; and to request that we would further inform your Lordship what answer should, in our opinion, be returned to the Admiralty on the question of docking belligerent vessels at Malta.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming war to have broken out, then,—

1st. With respect to ships already built in this country which have left this country and been commissioned by a foreign Government abroad, they must be treated, when they return to any British port, as ships of war belonging to a belligerent.

2ndly. With respect to ships already built and paid for by a foreign Government, but which have not yet left the ports of this country, we think that if there should be evidence to satisfy Her Majesty's Government that any such vessel was bonâ fide built, not for the purpose of carrying on warlike operations against a particular Power, but generally for the purpose of augmenting the force of the fleet of a foreign State, she might be allowed to depart in the state in which she is, without any additional armament, to the ports of the foreign State which has purchased her.

3rdly. With respect to cases in which the vessels are in course of construction, we are clearly of opinion that their fitting out and equipment should not be permitted to be continued; and that if it should be continued, they ought not to be allowed to leave this country.

That we think my Lords of the Admiralty may properly approve of the instructions given by Lord Clarence Paget to Rear-Admiral Kellet, and that it is not necessary that any further orders should be given to him with reference to docking Italian or Austrian ships.

We must observe, however, that the instructions contained in your Lordship's letter to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty (25th February, 1866), which Lord Clarence Paget seems to consider it incumbent on him to follow with respect to the ports and harbours under his command, are applicable only to the hostilities now existing between Spain and Chile and Peru; and that if (as we presume) the same rules are intended to be applied to the hostilities now imminent between Austria and Prussia and Italy, it will be necessary for the Board of Admiralty to issue new and substantive instructions for that purpose,

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 14, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion whether, under the XVth Article of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of the 6th August, 1863, between this country and Italy, British subjects in Italy are entitled to claim exemption from being called upon to billet or lodge soldiers, and annexing to the said letter a copy of the Treaty in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the question submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this question is not entirely free from doubt; but we think that, according to the liberal construction which good faith requires should be put upon the language of an international contract, British subjects ought to be considered as exempt, under the terms of this Article, from the obligation to billet and lodge soldiers. The billeting of soldiers appears to us to fall within the category of a military exaction or requisition ("prestazione o requisizione militare").

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* with reference to an application from the Italian Minister at this Court, on behalf of his Government, to obtain the formal depositions of Mr. Moens, in regard to his capture by the brigand Manzo, and of the other British subjects who were concerned in this affair; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which can be taken in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the Italian Minister should be informed that the law of England does not permit or enable any depositions to be taken in this country from Mr. Moens with the object for which it is required by the Italian Minister.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 31, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Minister at Florence,† subsequent to our Report of the 12th May last, in regard to the form of declaration to be made by Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular authorities in the case of British subjects desirous of contracting marriages within the Italian dominions according to the new Civil Code; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the form of declaration now proposed by the Italian Government may be adopted.

The former papers were also annexed for convenience of reference.‡

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the difference between the form recommended by Her Majesty's Government and that recommended by the Italian Government consists in the omission by the latter of the words "that I know of," thereby making the Consul declare absolutely that there is no obstacle to the celebration of the marriage.

We do not think that the Consul can be required to do more than certify that, upon the evidence submitted to him, there is, by the law of Great Britain, no obstacle; and that a certificate in the following form might be agreed to, and would probably answer the object of the Italian Government, namely:—

"A. B. and C. D. having gone through the formalities required by the law of Great Britain for enabling them to be married at Her Majesty's Legation or Consulate, I , Her Britannic Majesty's upon the evidence laid before me, hereby certify that, according to the laws of Great Britain, there is no obstacle to the celebration of their marriage."

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 7, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th of July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a letter, dated the 18th ultimo, and its inclosure, from Lieutenant-General Peel, requesting to be informed whether there is any objection to Captain Palliser communicating certain details connected with the manufacture of his chilled shot to the Italian Government; and to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what answer should be returned to the Secretary of State for War, having reference to Her Majesty's Proclamation of Neutrality.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Major Palliser having applied to Her Majesty's Government to give its formal sanction to his communicating to a belligerent in a war in which Her Majesty is neutral, an invention relative to the manufacture of instruments of war, we do not think it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should give its sanction to Major Palliser making this communication.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received August 9.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 8, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 29th of June, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the accompanying letter from the Admiralty and Board of Trade, containing the views of the Admiralty Advocate, and the observations of that Board with regard to the instructions issued to Italian naval officers respecting the exercise of belligerent rights at sea during the present war; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to make thereupon, and as to the expediency of making any communication to the Italian Government on the subject. A copy of the Italian circular and of the instructions were likewise inclosed for reference, if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this matter, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that it is not desirable that Her Majesty's Government should open any communication whatever with the Italian Government on the subject of these instructions to their naval officers.

During the course of this war, as during the course of the war in South America, instructions have been issued to the belligerents far more favourable, generally speaking, to the neutral than those which the Government of this country, when belligerent, has been in the habit of issuing.

It is, of course, quite competent to the Government of a belligerent to issue Proclamations or Ordinances whereby they restrict themselves in the exercise of the rights accorded by international law to the status of a belligerent. Such an act, on their part, binds themselves only; and it may well happen that the right in the exercise of which they restrict themselves is one which considerations of a particular nature belonging to the particular occasion would render it inexpedient, or perhaps impossible, that they should exercise.

The neutral Government has no reason for interference because they receive a treatment more favourable than that which they are strictly entitled to demand; but if they do any act wherefrom their approbation of this departure from the usual rights of the belligerent, as a maxim of international law, is to be inferred, they may most seriously embarrass their future action when their country happens to be belligerent, and when perhaps it may be of vital importance to the State to exercise the very right of which it is now by implication recognizing the abolition.

In any case, such a step upon the part of this country, whose chief arm in war is her navy, and whose principal means of aggression or self-defence is the exercise of maritime belligerent rights, should not be taken, we humbly think, without the gravest deliberation, and the most ample consideration of all the consequences.

With respect to the two points noticed by the Admiralty Advocate, namely, those which refer to contraband and blockade, we have to observe that on the question of contraband, though the principles of international law relating to it have been generally adopted by States without much difference of opinion, the question as to the particular ingredients of contraband has always been, to some extent, matter of controversy.

It is certainly true that if the meaning of the Italian Government be that goods unquestionably contraband, when sent on neutral account for sale to an enemy's country, are to be exempt from capture, that they are, so far as they are concerned, abandoning a clear right of the belligerent captor. And so with regard to blockade: if they adopt the rule (which the French have, however, always maintained) that a neutral vessel is entitled to warning on the spot before it can be seized for a breach of blockade, they are enunciating a rule greatly in favour of the neutral.

Upon both these points the Government of the United States maintained and enforced during the late war a totally opposite practice. The Government of this country has always pursued a similar course.

But the course of action which the Italian Government thus prescribes to itself cannot be considered as affecting the existing rights of other States now neutral, but which may hereafter be belligerent.

Upon the whole, we see no reason why Her Majesty's Government should make any communication or express any opinion upon these instructions; and we see much and grave inconvenience which might flow from such a proceeding.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Sir Harry Parkes (No. 21, February 13), inclosing copies of correspondence respecting the prison of Her Majesty's Consulate at Kanagawa being used as a municipal lock-up; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 15, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Japan (No. 20, February 13), forwarding a correspondence between Mr. Flowers, the Acting British Consul at Yokohama, and Mr. Fisher, the Consul for the United States, arising out of a charge of larceny brought by Mr. Alexander McKechnie, a British subject, against Gustave Glackmeyer, a young American in his employ; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

That we have perused the volume containing the fifty-two inclosures which accompanies Mr. Hammond's letter, but it does not appear necessary to us to state in detail the reasons which have led us to the conclusion which we have now the honour to express.

First, with respect to the arrest of Glackmeyer by McKechnie, and the subsequent action brought by the former against the latter in the British Consular Court, and the judgment of Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. Flowers, thereupon, we are of opinion that a justification not having been specially pleaded, Mr. Flowers was technically wrong in not finding the issue on the plea of "Not guilty" (which only operates in law as a denial of the trespass charged) in favour of the plaintiff; and that the decision of Sir E. Hornby so far modifying the Judgment of Mr. Flowers in this respect, and inflicting a fine of 40*s*. on McKechnie, was correct.

It is clear to us that the place in which Glackmeyer was confined, though part of the British prison, had been used as a lock-up by all the foreign Consuls, including the American, and that the attempt of Mr. Fisher to make a grievance out of the place of the confinement was extremely disingenuous.

2ndly. With respect to the charge of assault preferred by Rickerby against Glackmeyer in the American Consular Court, we are of opinion that the latter had been guilty of a gross outrage upon the former, and that the trivial punishment inflicted upon him by the American Consul was a plain failure of justice. Nor do we understand how it happens that the charge of larceny, regularly preferred by Mr. McKechnie against Glackmeyer before Mr. Fisher (and which Mr. Fisher refused to try until the action of Glackmeyer against McKechnie for false imprisonment should have been disposed of), has never been proceeded with by Mr. Fisher, who seems to have throughout spoken and acted as the patron, rather than the Judge, of the person so accused.

3rdly. With respect to the case of Mr. Seare, we agree in the opinion expressed by Sir E. Hornby, by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, and, we are happy to add, by the American Chargé d'Affaires: (1.) That the American Consul had no power, in the circumstances, to compel Seare to give evidence at all; (2.) That, at the most, his power was limited to causing his expulsion from the Court, and that the ordering and causing him to be sent in custody through the street to the British Consulate was clearly illegal.

We must observe, however, that the conduct of Seare in attending the American Court upon the following day was injudicious and reprehensible.

It is hardly necessary to express our opinion that the conduct of the American Consul, Mr. Fisher, has been from first to last most discreditable; while the conduct of Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. Flowers, notwithstanding the one error in judgment to which we have adverted, is in every respect most favourably contrasted with that of his foreign colleague.

The course pursued by Sir Harry Parkes, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, appears to us to have been extremely proper and judicious, and the frank and honourable manner in which the United States' Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Portman, has received and replied to the communication of Sir H. Parkes, leads us to join in the expectation expressed by Sir H. Parkes in his last letter to Mr. Portman (which closes the correspondence before us), that satisfactory assurances will yet be given by that gentleman upon those points upon which they were felt (and we think justly) by Sir H. Parkes to be still required.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 15th May, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Sir Harry Parkes, inclosing copies of his further correspondence with the United States' Chargé d'Affaires in Japan, relative to the case of Mr. Seare, a British subject, arrested by the United States' Consul at Yokohama; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is necessary to pursue the question further. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that a despatch in the sense of the Law Officers' Report of the 15th May has already been addressed to Sir Harry Parkes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Parkes (Nos. 147, 149, 150, and 151), respecting a further regulation issued by him debarring British ships from conveying into or through the Strait of Shimonosaki Japanese troops or munitions of war, or Japanese passengers in excess of the numbers authorized by Her Majesty's Consuls; and to request that we would take this further regulation into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper to be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Regulation of the 5th of September (copies of which have been forwarded to us with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant) has been properly made under the 95th section of the Order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 9th day of March, 1865; and that the Regulation is right and proper to be approved.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 27, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a collection of papers divided by a mark into two series: the one relating to certain proceedings in the Consular Court at Hakodate in Japan, arising out of the complaint made by the Japanese authorities of the desecration by certain British subjects of the graves of a Japanese race of people known by the name of Ainos; the other relating to the conduct of the Consul, Captain Vyse, in connection with the transmission of a portion of the proceeds of the robbery to England, and the explanations that he has given on the subject.

That with regard to the second portion of the correspondence, Mr. Hammond inclosed two memoranda containing, at least the one bearing date the 18th instant, a full abstract of it; and stated that your Lordship would be much obliged if we would consider the statements laid before us in these papers, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether, on the evidence contained in them, there is sufficient proof to establish the complicity of Captain Vyse in the improper transactions disclosed in these papers, especially as regards the disposal of the bones sent to England. That we should observe in looking through the correspondence, reference made to the conduct of Mr. Enslie, the interpreter in the Consulate at Hakodate, in regard to these matters; an abstract of the papers relating to this point being also sent to us: and that your Lordship would be glad also on this point to be furnished with our opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Report which the Queen's Advocate had prepared with respect to the conduct of Consul Vyse is not sent in, on account of the subsequent letter from Mr. Hammand rendering any report thereon unnecessary.

That with respect to the conduct of Mr. Enslie, we have to state our entire concurrence in the opinion expressed by Sir Harry Parkes in his despatch to Lord Clarendon (April 15, 1866, Yokohama).

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th November ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 13th of that month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister in Japan (No. 161, September 29, 1866), relative to a notification issued by the Dutch Political Agent in that country, respecting the navigation of the Straits of Shimonosaki by Netherland ships during the war between the Tycoon and Choshiu; and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Sir Harry Parkes has taken a correct view of his duty with respect to British ships at this particular juncture, and that he ought not to follow or be influenced by the course which the Dutch Political Agent has thought proper to adopt.

We do not understand that Sir Harry Parkes doubts his authority to give permission to British merchant-vessels to convey troops or munitions of war for the Tycoon Government on the terms of their doing so at their own risk, and without laying Her Majesty's Government under any obligation to protect them. We think that Sir H. Parkes has such authority if he were to deem it prudent to exercise it.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received July 11.)

Doctors' Commons, July 11, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 71), relative to a negotiation which is reported to have been entered into by a person styling himself an Agent of the Mexican Republic in the United States, for the sale to an American Company of a portion of Lower California.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make thereon, and especially respecting the bearing which such a sale may have in regard to the interests of the London bondholders.

A correspondence which took place respecting the question of a sale of a portion of of Mexico to the United States, which was at the time referred to Her Majesty's Advocate-General, was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if part of the Mexican territory, the revenues of which are already pledged or hypothecated to the British bondholders, be sold without their consent, it will still be liable to discharge its due share of the interest or principal of the debt to the bondholders. Care should be taken that the purchaser be duly affected, previously to the purchase, with the knowledge of the lien which the foreign creditor has upon the territory in question.

I agree substantially with the Report of my predecessor in office, to which my attention is called, upon this question, and which does not materially differ from the private opinion given by me to which reference is partially made by Mr. Scarlett, and which is given at length in the paper submitted to the former Queen's Advocate.

No. 121.

Doctors' Commons, December 14, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Mr. Seward, the Acting British Consul and Political Agent at Zanzibar, together with a Memorandum drawn up in the Foreign Office upon questions connected with the suppression of the Slave Trade on the East Coast of Africa, and more particularly in regard to the engagements of the Sultan of Zanzibar in this matter towards this country:

That by the terms of an agreement signed at Zanzibar in 1845, which came in force on the 1st of January, 1847, the Imaum of Muscat engaged by Article I to prohibit under the several penalties the exportation of slaves from his African dominions, and by Article III to grant to the ships of Her Majesty's navy, as well as to those of the East India Company, permission to seize and confiscate any vessels the property of His Highness, or of his subjects, carrying on Slave Trade, excepting only such as were engaged in the transport of slaves from one part to another of his own dominions in Africa, between the port of Lamoo to the north and his dependencies, the northern limit of which is the north point of Kuyloo Island, in 1° 57′ south latitude, and the port of Keelwa to the south, and its dependencies, the southern limit of which is Souga Manara, or Pagoda Point, in 9° 2′ south latitude, including the Islands of Zanzibar, Pemba, and Mongia:

That by the terms of a further Agreement, concluded in May 1850, the Imaum also consented that the ships of Her Majesty the Queen of England should be allowed to enter the creeks, rivers, and harbours in his territories, in which slaves were shipped contrary to his orders, and that the vessels found engaged in the Slave Trade might be seized, and the barracoons destroyed:

That in 1863 the Sultan also further consented to prohibit entirely the transport of slaves from port to port in his dominions, during the months of January, February, March, and April, these being the months that the Northern Arabs from the Persian Gulf and Red Sea frequented the coast of the Sultan's territories for the purpose of procuring slaves:

That it will be seen, however, from Mr. Seward's despatch of the 10th of September last, that in consequence of the recent destruction by a British cruizer of a native vessel in or about Zanzibar waters proper, and the asserted spoliation of another in the neighbourhood of Pemba Island by Her Majesty's ship "Pantaloon," the Sultan of Zanzibar now protests against any interference, in any way, of British cruizers with Zanzibar vessels in Zanzibar waters; and His Highness claims as Zanzibar waters the whole area of waters included within lines drawn parallel to the African coast, north and south, from the outside or eastern shores of Zanzibar and Pemba Islands to Cape Delgado and Lamoo:

That this practically amounts to a claim of jurisdiction over the waters to a distance of ten miles from the coast; and Mr. Seward asks, therefore, for information upon the following points, namely:—

1. As to the extent of Zanzibar territorial waters proper, over which a claim to jurisdiction can be recognized by Her Majesty's Government.

2. Whether the practice of search and detention in the waters acknowledged to be territorial is to be discontinued; and

3. Whether exemption from search and detention within the wide limits set forth by the Sultan of Zanzibar can be conceded.

Mr. Egerton was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Seward on the points on which he requests information; and also whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in taking any, and if any what, steps to compel the Sultan to carry out his engagements for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the three engagements specified, namely, the Treaty of 1845, the formal concession of 1856, the Engagement of 1863, taken together, contain the positive international obligations of the Ruler of Zanzibar to Her Majesty; that by these instruments Her Majesty's ships may seize and confiscate Zanzibar slavers generally on the high seas, and also vessels transporting slaves from port to port in the Zanzibar dominions, during January, February, March, and April; and Her Majesty's ships may enter creeks, rivers, and harbours in Zanzibar territories, "from Songa Manara to Tonghe," for the purpose of destroying slavers.

If this last engagement be, as it appears to me to be, binding, the question of the inviolability of the territorial waters within these limits does not arise.

With respect to other territorial waters, upon general principles of international law, the Sultan is not entitled to claim jurisdiction beyond the distance of cannon-shot, at present still estimated at three miles, from the shore.

It does not appear to me that his claim to the larger area of waters mentioned can be supported, either by usage (for it appears that "down to 1850 there had been no mention of territorial rights or waters:" despatch of Mr. Seward, No. 132 of 1866), or by reasons arising from the natural configuration of the coast—circumstances which have sometimes been considered as sufficient to sustain such a claim.

I think that the limitation of the right of search, &c., in territorial waters from Songa Manara to Tonghe, did, if considered per se, virtually imply that no general right of search, &c., in territorial waters had been conceded by the Sultan; but as, on the other hand, this general right has up to the present time, been exercised generally in all the territorial waters, without objection or remonstrance, and as it is almost indispensable for the due execution of the original Treaty, and as the Sultan does not, from whatever cause, fulfil his part of the engagements with Her Majesty as to the suppression of the Slave Trade, I think that Mr. Seward should be instructed to this effect:—

1. That in no event can Her Majesty recognize the Sultan's claim to a wider claim over territorial waters than the usual limit of three miles from the shore.

2. That when the Sultan fulfils that part of his engagement which binds him to suppress, in every way, the Slave Trade, Her Majesty's Government will consider whether, consistently with their sole object, the suppression of the Slave Trade, they can abandon the practice sanctioned by such long usage, and never before complained of, of capturing slavers in the waters of Zanzibar.

Doctors' Commons, February 23, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to my predecessor's Report of the 20th of May, 1861, relative to the claim of Mr. Dreland, of the barque "Handy," against the Netherlands Government, on account of the seizure of part of the cargo of that vessel by an officer of the Netherlands Board of Shorage, he was directed to transmit to me two further representations which have been received from Mr. Dreland on this subject, dated the 24th October, 1865, and the 10th February, 1866.

The former papers relating to the case were also inclosed, and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether there is anything in Mr. Dreland's last communication to alter the decision which Her Majesty's Government have come to with regard to this claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Dreland is under an error in supposing that Her Majesty's Government ever undertook to intervene on his behalf with the Government of the Netherlands in the event of Mr. Dreland not succeeding in his suit before the Courts of that State. Her Majesty's Government would only be justified in addressing any remonstrance to the Government of the Netherlands in the case of a plain and palpable miscarriage of justice, in re minime dubiâ, by the tribunals of that State.

I am clearly of opinion that the case of Mr. Dreland is not of this kind. I see no reason whatever for imputing any misconduct to the Netherlands tribunals. These tribunals differed in opinion and decision, but this is a circumstance of continual occurrence in England, and Her Majesty's Government would certainly not entertain any application from the Netherlands Government in similar circumstances.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,[*] which has passed between the Rev. John McKraith, the Foreign Office, and Her Majesty's Consul at Amsterdam, relative to the case of William Martin, a British subject imprisoned in that town upon a charge of theft; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as it appears doubtful whether any intended theft was committed by this man, I think the Consul should be instructed to provide him with counsel at the coming trial, who might explain that the act was not done by the Englishman animo furandi, and that according to the law of England the finder of property without an owner may keep it against everybody but the real owner; but if he has reasonable means of discovering the owner, and refrains from doing so, he is guilty of theft—not otherwise. During the present year it has been decided at Guildhall that a man who found property in a railway carriage was not bound to give it up to the officers of the railway company.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform me that on receipt of my Report of the 5th instant, an instruction was addressed to Her Majesty's Consul at Amsterdam, instructing him to provide William Martin with counsel at the trial to which he was about to be subjected on a charge of theft. The reply which has been received from Mr. Consul Newnham reporting his proceedings in this respect was also inclosed (No. 16); and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further steps, if any, which Mr. Consul Newnham should take in the matter. In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received October 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 2, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 20th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying notes from the Netherlands Minister at this Court, dated the 30th July and 6th August ultimo, complaining of outrages committed by British fishermen upon Dutch subjects in the North Sea.

Mr. Egerton was also pleased to inclose a letter dated September 18 from the Board of Trade, to whom these complaints were referred by your Lordship, and to state that in compliance with the suggestion contained in the letter from that Department he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the matter into our earliest consideration, and report to your Lordship what answer should be returned to Baron Bentinck's communications.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we recommend further inquiry to be made of the captains and crews of the three Yarmouth vessels ("Echo," "Faith," and "Inspector") mentioned in the depositions, and also amongst the crews of the three vessels implicated in the charges, viz., "The Good Intent," the "Frank," and the "Fred."

We further recommend that proceedings be instituted against such of the parties as can be proved to have taken part in the acts complained of upon the high seas and beyond the jurisdiction of the Dutch authorities.

That we think an answer should be returned to the communications of Baron Bentinck to the effect that inquiries have been directed into the matters of complaint which his Excellency has brought to the attention of Her Majesty's Government; that in consequence of the absence of the crews of the vessels there has been great difficulty in obtaining the necessary information, but that the result of the inquiries, up to the present time, Her Majesty's Government regret to say leads to the conclusion that the complaints are but too well founded.

That the captains of two of the vessels implicated have been discharged by the owners, and are not now to be found.

That Her Majesty's Government will be most anxious to take measures, in concert with the Government of the King of the Netherlands, to repress and prevent the recurrence of such conduct for the future, and will be happy to consider any suggestions with which they may be favoured by the King's Government with that view.

That as regards the case of the "Eensgezindheid," in which the offence appears to have been committed in Dutch waters, the punishment of the offenders would rest with the Dutch authorities, and that it is to be regretted that the parties were not immediately prosecuted, the more so inasmuch as even if they could now be found, in the absence of any Extradition Treaty, they could not be remitted to Holland for trial there upon the charges in question.

That the case of the "Jonge Cornelis Koeman," and any other case where the acts were committed upon the high seas and beyond the limits of Dutch waters, the English Courts would have jurisdiction; and that as soon as the parties can be found and identified, and sufficient evidence can be obtained against them, they shall be prosecuted and an endeavour made to obtain their conviction.

We think from the unwillingness of the crews of the vessels to give evidence against their comrades, it may be difficult to obtain convictions without the Dutch fishermen and sailors coming over to this country to give evidence and to identify the offenders, and a request should, we think, be made to know whether they would be willing to come over for the purpose when required.

The occurrence of the three cases now complained of within a very short period, and the statement of Mr. William Morgan that he believes that similar acts of robbery by British fishermen have not been uncommon during the present year, appears to us to show that this matter requires serious and immediate attention, and we recommend that every endeavour be made to prosecute the present offenders and to convict them.

Doctors' Commons, November 19, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Surinam (No. 20), stating the circumstances under which the cargo of the British ship "Artemisia" had been forcibly unloaded contrary to the will of the master, but under an order from the local authority; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take any, and what, notice of the proceedings of the Surinam authorities in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this is a case of what is technically called the right of "stoppage in transitu," according to which the vendor is entitled to stop goods while still in an intermediate agent's hands, and undelivered to the purchaser. It is a right very generally recognised in all systems of jurisprudence, and especially in those founded, as the Dutch system is, upon the Roman law, according to which "qui rem nondum emptori tradidit adhuc ipse dommus est." This right appears to have been unjustifiably interfered with in the present instance; but it is impossible to form a correct opinion upon the subject without reading all the papers, and being apprised what the Dutch law is upon the point. These papers (and this information also, I presume) are, Mr. Munroe says, to be sent by the following mail.

In the meantime it might be proper that your Lordship should apprise Mr. Munroe that as at present advised it appears to your Lordship that the forcible taking of these goods out of a British ship requires explanation, which it will be his duty to obtain from the authorities at Surinam.

My Lord,

of a correspondence with Her Majesty's Consul at Rotterdam on the subject of the refusal of the Netherlands police authorities to assist in the arrest of Dutch seamen who have deserted from British vessels; and Mr. Egerton was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to offer thereupon.

For my further information Mr. Egerton was pleased to inclose a copy of the Article referred to by Mr. Ward, in the draft of a Commercial Treaty which it was proposed to negotiate with the Netherlands Government, but which has not as yet been concluded.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I understand that the refusal of the Dutch water bailiff to arrest the Dutch seamen who had deserted from the English ship was upon the ground that by the Dutch law he had no power to do so. I do not find that this position is contradicted, and, à priori, it would seem to me very probably to be correct; this point should be ascertained.

If this be so, I am of opinion that the Treaty was not violated by this refusal, as it is expressly provided by the Xth Article that the assistance of the local authorities should be such as they "may be enabled by law to give."

It is not necessary at present to consider the further question whether the Treaty could be construed to extend to the necessity of arresting native subjects who have deserted from a foreign ship.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 9.)

Doctors' Commons, May 9, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, with its inclosures, which has been received from Mr. Percy Brandon, complaining of a decision of the Columbian Law Courts in regard to a debt due to him, and requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government in his behalf; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That for the consideration of this claim it must be assumed that the Government which made this Decree as to the paper money of the State being legal tender, and which gave a retroactive effect to its Decree, was the de facto Government of the country, howsoever it became so. The law, however unjust and vicious in its principle, did not inflict a special injury upon the foreigner; it affected equally all inhabitants of the State. It is clear that the Judges were obliged to obey the law, they not having, as the Judges in the United States of North America have, a power by the constitution of the country to declare the law to have been ultra vires of the Legislative Power. These premises lead to the conclusion that unless there be some Treaty obligation which confers a special privilege on the foreigner in this matter, his civil contracts, like those of the native subject, must be subject to the law of the territory—however bad that may be—in which they are made. The Treaty (3 Hertslet, p. 57) provides that merchants "shall enjoy the most complete protection and security for their commerce;" but it also contains the further provision, not cited by Mr. Brandon, "subject always to the laws and statutes of the two countries respectively." Such a provision does not prevent the State from passing a law as to paper money being legal tender within its territory. Upon the whole I must express my opinion that there is no ground for the special interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mr. Brandon.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 24th instant, respecting the Peruvian steamer-of-war "Huascar" he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Brest (No. 6), reporting the arrival of that vessel, and the dissatisfaction of the British portion of her crew. That Sir Anthony Perrier has been instructed by telegraph to facilitate by all means legally within his power the discharge of any British seamen from the ship; but that your Lordship would be glad to know whether any further instructions could in our opinion be given to him on the subject, and also whether it would be advisable to send similar instructions to Her Majesty's Consul at Havre with reference to the Peruvian frigate "Independencia," which was understood to be destined for that port.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to our previous Reports respecting the case of the Peruvian ship "Independencia," he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that there is reason to anticipate that that vessel, which since her departure from this country has been in the Scheldt, together with her consort, the "Huascar," which since her departure from this country has been at Brest, may shortly put into a British port. That Her Majesty's Government have no official information of war having been declared by Peru against Spain, but that a declaration to that effect appeared in the newspapers of yesterday. But be that as it may, as there is reason to suppose that a part of the crew of one or both these vessels is composed of British subjects, Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether, supposing these vessels put into an English port, Her Majesty's Government [would be justified ?] in requiring their commanders to land any British seamen who may be on board, and if the commanders should refuse to do so, then in requiring them forthwith to depart from the British port, and to prohibit them from obtaining any supplies whatever during their stay in such port.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, generally speaking, I see nothing to object to in these instructions. They are, in most particulars, more favourable to the neutral than those which England was in the habit of issuing to her privateers. But with respect to the Article which constitutes what is termed an ad referendum Prize Tribunal of naval officers, I am of opinion that the Peruvian Government should be apprised, as the Spanish Government has been, by Her Majesty's Government, that they will expect that no British vessel or cargo be condemned as prize without a proper trial in a proper Prize Court, before which the owners of the captured vessel or cargo may have ample opportunity of conducting their defence by professional advice. That Her Majesty's Government presume, therefore, the ad

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at Lima (No. 11), relative to a representation addressed to him by the British merchants in that city, on the subject of a Decree recently issued by the Peruvian Government, imposing an export duty of 3 per cent. ad valorem on various articles forming the principal objects of commerce between this country and Peru; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, with reference to the bearing on the question of the VIIIth Article of the Treaty between Peru and the United States, and to the privileges claimed under the IIIrd Article of the Treaty of Commerce between this country and Peru of the 10th of April, 1850.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that, in this instance, the argument from the favoured-nation clause fails, inasmuch as the Treaty which contained the privilege granted by Peru to the subjects of the American United States has been abrogated, and is no longer in existence.

I think, however, that the objection of the Consul to the retroactive effect of the Decree should be again pressed upon the Peruvian Government, on the ground of its inflicting unforeseen hardship upon the British subject. The objection, however strongly urged, should be put upon this ground.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul-General at Lima, inclosing copy of a Decree issued by the Peruvian Government prohibiting the entry into the ports of Peru of neutral vessels which have furnished the Spanish squadron with fuel, provisions, articles of war, or of any other kind, or which have been in communication with that squadron; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is competent to the Peruvian Government, in time of war, to make such a Decree, with respect to the reception in their ports of neutral vessels, as may have the effect of defending or relieving their country from the pressure of a belligerent and blockading force. It is for that Government to judge whether the Decree in question is or is not calculated to produce this effect. It must be treated at present as a measure of self-defence, and the neutral State cannot demand, as a matter of right, the revocation of such a Decree, though, of course, the neutral State may amicably remonstrate against it, and endeavour to show that while the Decree will not produce the effect intended it will injuriously affect neutral commerce. It seems to be worthy of consideration whether the Decree should or should not be noticed in the "Gazette."

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 22), inclosing copies of a correspondence with Rear-Admiral Denman in regard to the arrangements made between the Commander of the Spanish naval forces in Chilean waters and the Pacific Steam Navigation Company for the conveyance of mails and passengers to and from Chilean and other ports; and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I might have to offer thereupon.

The former papers connected with the arrangement were likewise transmitted to me.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima has taken, in his letter to Admiral Denman (April 3, 1866), a correct view of his duty in this matter. The engagement of Chile made with the British Admiral cannot be considered as absolutely binding on Peru, on the sole ground of her subsequent alliance with Chile in this war, though it is a reasonable expectation that Peru will adopt the same course as Chile with respect to the conveyance of mails by the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. The suggestion made by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, that Spanish officers should be placed on board one of Her Majesty's ships of war, and not allowed to remain on board the vessels of this Company while in the port of Callao, appears, in the circumstances, to be reasonable and prudent.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Peru reporting that the blockade of the Spanish naval forces in the port of Callao had been raised; and was to request that I would take the same into my immediate consideration, and, if the notice were sufficient, prepare the draft of a notification to be inserted in the "Gazette" of to-morrow.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion the notice of the raising of this blockade is sufficient: I have therefore prepared, and herewith transmit, a draft notification thereof for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.

SPAIN AND PERU.—RAISING OF THE BLOCKADE OF THE PORT OF CALLAO BY THE SPANISH NAVAL FORCES.

Draft Notification.

Foreign Office, June 15, 1866.

IT is hereby notified that the Earl of Clarendon, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Peru a despatch stating that he (the said Chargé d'Affaires) had received from the Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish naval forces in the Pacific a despatch (dated the 9th May, 1866) announcing the raising of the blockade of the port of Callao from that date, and of the departure of the Spanish squadron from Peruvian waters.

The following is an extract from the said despatch of the Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish naval forces above referred to:—

No. 141.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received July 26.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, July 24, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 5th April last on the subject of the institution by the Peruvian Government of what was termed an ad referendum Prize Court of Naval Officers during the late hostilities with Spain, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch on the subject from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 37, June 11), and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may have to offer thereon. The former papers were inclosed for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to submit to your Lordship the following observations upon the reply of the Peruvian Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:—

That I beg leave to draw the attention of your Lordship to my Reports upon this subject of the 30th November, 16th and 18th of December, 1865, and 19th of January and 14th of March, 1866.

That the Peruvian Government is misinformed if it supposes that Her Majesty's Government has ever assented to the constitution of a Prize Court, properly so called, on board a Spanish man-of-war. On the contrary, Her Majesty's Government have from the first maintained the proposition that no neutral vessel can be properly tried, much less condemned, before any tribunal, but one duly constituted according to the law, practice, and usage of nations, which a tribunal on board a belligerent man-of-war certainly is not; inasmuch as (as Her Majesty's Government observed to the Government of Spain) it is wanting in the essential requisites of such a tribunal.

The Spanish Government replied that they had no intention of ascribing to the inquiry on board the belligerent man-of-war the character of a prize decision, and that they did not deny the right of the neutral to be adjudicated upon before a properly constituted Prize Tribunal in the territorial dominions of Spain, but they said that the inquiry had for its object simply to ascertain whether there was such a primâ facie case of suspicion as would warrant the captor in sending the prize to be adjudicated upon in the territorial dominions of Spain, or whether the vessel should not be immediately released.

Now, as it was the undoubted right of the belligerent (subject, indeed, to a responsibility as to costs and damages) to send the vessel in for such adjudication, the neutral owner, while he could not deny the abstract right of the belligerent to send his vessel for trial to a Prize Court in the Spanish dominions, might be advantaged by the immediate release of her. It was therefore upon the distinct understanding that the neutral could in no way be damnified, but would probably be benefited by this preliminary inquiry, that Her Majesty's Government ceased to remonstrate against it.

If it be the intention of the Peruvian Government to adopt a strictly similar course, it will probably not be the disposition of Her Majesty's Government to object to it; but the Peruvian Government should be distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government do not surrender, in any way or in any degree, the full right of the neutral to be tried before a proper tribunal, constituted and sitting in the territorial dominions of the belligerent, and that while Her Majesty's Government will not recognize the validity of a sentence of condemnation passed upon any vessel belonging to Her Majesty's subjects by any other Tribunal, Her Majesty's Government will also reserve to itself the right of demanding, according to the circumstances of the case, compensation on behalf of British vessels unjustifiably detained, though eventually released, in consequence of the inquiry on board the Peruvian man-of-war.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 7.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Peru (No. 59), inclosing two Decrees recently published by the Government of that Republic, by which it is proposed to impose an annual contribution on all Peruvian subjects as well as foreigners resident in Peru.

The answer which your Lordship has addressed to Mr. Barton on the subject was also inclosed (No. 12), and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the right of the Peruvian Government to levy the contribution in question on foreigners.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by the IXth Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Peru, April 10, 1850, it is provided that all Her Majesty's subjects in Peru shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether by sea or land, and from all forced loans or "military exactions or requisitions; and they shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay any ordinary charges, requisitions, or taxes, other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native subjects or citizens."

If, therefore, the first Decree, which is not before me in extenso, partook of the character of a military exaction or requisition, it was not competent to the Government of Peru to put it in force against Her Majesty's subjects. In any event it was not competent to that Government to enforce against Her Majesty's subjects the XVIth Article (a copy of which is before me), ordering persons who had not paid the contribution to be treated as conscripts of the National Military Force.

But it is competent to the Government of Peru, having increased the ordinary taxes upon its own subjects, to compel Her Majesty's subjects resident in Peru to bear the like charge.

Much, therefore, depends upon the character of the "personal contribution."

I presume from the letters of Mr. Barton that it was of a character to trench upon the privilege of exemption accorded by the Treaty to Her Majesty's subjects, and it therefore appears to me that the letter which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Barton is right and proper to be sent.

Doctors' Commons, November 21, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 24th July last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires in Peru (No. 61, October 12), inclosing a correspondence which he had had with the Peruvian Government in regard to Prize Courts held on board belligerent vessels of war; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for convenience of reference, the former papers on the subject.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That if Mr. Barton's inference be correct, namely, that the Peruvian Government accepts the proposition of the Spanish to the British Government in the sense put upon that proposition by Her Majesty's Government, the object of the remonstrance to the Peruvian Government has been practically obtained. But the despatch of the Peruvian Government is very diffuse, and not very clear, and is chiefly occupied with maintaining that the Spanish Government have not done what they promised to do.

I think, therefore, that Mr. Barton should be instructed to apprise the Peruvian Government that Her Majesty's Government have no desire to prolong this discussion, but that they accept the Peruvian answer as admitting the justice of the demand of Her Majesty's Government that no vessel belonging to Her Majesty's subjects be captured or tried otherwise than according to the strict rules of international law, and that no tribunal on board a belligerent ship can be recognized by Her Majesty's Government as a proper Prize Tribunal; though Her Majesty's Government do not desire to interfere with any regulation which the Peruvian Government may make, having for its object to provide that no neutral vessel shall be sent in to be tried before a proper Prize Court duly constituted, and sitting in the belligerent territory, without a preliminary decision by a council on board a Peruvian ship that the neutral vessel ought to be subjected to this inconvenience.

I have, &c.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 10.)

Doctors' Commons, January 9, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter received in January 1865, from Messrs. Miller and Horsman, together with its inclosures, requesting the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain from the Government of Portugal a settlement of the claim put forward by the owners and underwriters of the British vessel "Riverdale," to a balance said to be due to them on the salvage of the cargo.

* Mr. Barton, No. 10, February 27; No. 37, June 11, 1866.

Mr. Hammond was also to inclose the instructions which were addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, and the correspondence which has taken place between him and the Portuguese Government on the subject; and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Sir A. Magenis in the matter, and whether he can properly be authorized to make the declaration required by the Portuguese Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, strictly speaking, Messrs. Miller and Horsman should be required to state to your Lordship precisely what the proof was which the Portuguese Courts required, and which they say the alleged owners and underwriters have not furnished; but looking to all the circumstances, among others to the facts that the proceeds of this vessel have been in the Portuguese Treasury since 1861, and that no other claimants, as I understand the case, have appeared, and that proper bonds of security are to be given by the claimants, I think Sir A. Magenis may be instructed to make the declaration required by the Portuguese Government.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 22.)

Doctors' Commons, March 21, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,* relative to the proceedings of the Portuguese authorities at Loanda in interfering with the proper duty of Her Majesty's Consul in regard to the clearance of British ships; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether any and what representation should be made to the Portuguese Government on this subject, and whether that representation may include a statement that the rules and port regulatious alluded to in the above-mentioned papers are at variance with the Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal of 1842, a copy of which will be found in vol. vi of Hertslet's Treaties, page 598.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the Report of the Board of Trade in this matter, and am of opinion that a remonstrance should be addressed to the Portuguese Government on the conduct of the civil authorities with respect to the endorsement in a foreign language on the ship's articles; the requiring the delivery up of the ship's agreement from the Consul at the time when he requires their use for purposes connected with the discharge of his duties; and with respect to taking out of the ship, when about to sail, distressed British seamen; and the general conduct of the police in preventing the shipment of seamen by the Consul without their consent.

There may be special circumstances justifying the intervention of the police in this matter, but unless they exist, the shipment of British seamen by the Consul should not be interfered with.

Lastly, with reference to the Port Regulations contained in Rules 8, 23, and 36, and their alleged conflict with the provisions of the Treaty of July 3, 1842:—

Rule 8, requiring a consignee to be appointed before a foreign vessel can enter or discharge, is not perhaps directly at variance with Article III of the Treaty, which refers in terms to resident persons, and not to captains of merchant ships; but I think it is contrary to the spirit and object of the Treaty, which is to place British and Portuguese traders upon the same footing.

Rule 23 appears to me to conflict with the two last clauses of Article XIV of the Treaty, and especially the passage recited in the letter of the Consul, with whose opinion upon this point I agree.

Rule 36 cannot, I think, be said to be directly at variance with the provisions of the Treaty, and it may be defended on the ground that the peace of the town required the enforcement of such a rule. It furnishes, however, ground for remonstrance on general grounds, and may be fairly complained of as harsh, arbitrary, and inhospitable. An obvious improvement upon it would be, that no seaman, without the express permission of his captain, should be allowed in the town after tattoo without liability to be fined. But I think that an endeavour should be made to remove the restriction altogether; it would always be competent to the authorities at Loanda to punish any seaman misconducting himself on shore.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 24, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence which has passed between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Portugal, and also between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda, arising out of the proceedings of the Portuguese authorities in Angola in permitting the exportation of negroes from that province, under the plea of their being libertos or freedmen, to the neighbouring Islands of Principe and San Thomé, contrary, as Her Majesty's Government believe and maintain, to the spirit and letter of the Treaty of 1842 between this country and Portugal for the suppression of the Slave Trade. A Memorandum, drawn up in the Foreign Office, showing the views taken by Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Portugal upon this matter, was also transmitted; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government are borne out in their views of the case, and, if so, what steps it would be proper to take in order to put a stop to the continued exportation of negroes from Angola to the adjacent Portuguese islands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the view which Her Majesty's Government have taken in this matter is correct. The true question is, whether this practice of exporting natives, called "libertos," from the Portuguese possessions on the mainland of the coast of Africa to the adjacent Portuguese islands be or be not a violation of the Treaty of 1842; and I have the honour to agree with the opinion of Her Majesty's Government that this practice is, in substance, a violation of the Treaty.

The Treaty carefully specifies the number and character of slaves who may accompany a Portuguese subject "in voyages to and from the Portuguese possessions off the coast of Africa." It is plain that if these persons, called libertos, are really slaves, they are not the class of slaves which by the Treaty Portuguese subjects are allowed to take with them.

It is further clear to me that these so-called libertos are, in fact and truth, slaves; and, indeed, so much is substantially admitted by the Decree of 1854, upon which the Portuguese authorities rely. By that Decree they are slaves to all intents and purposes for ten years, and their services, as slaves, may be sold for a whole or a portion of that time. The fact that a period of ten years is fixed as the limit of their time of slavery does not prevent their being slaves during that period, and before it expires. It was the thing, and not the name, it was which the object of the Treaty to prevent, and which it is the duty of the Parties to the Treaty to take care to prevent.

If it is competent to the Portuguese authorities to take slaves out of the operation of the Treaty by limiting the period of slavery to ten years, it is, as observed in the Foreign Office Memorandum, equally competent to them to produce the same effect by passing another Decree, and fixing a period of twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty years, and by this means the very object and end of the Treaty would be practically defeated; and that is the answer to the request of Count de Castro (Inclosure 2 in Sir A. Magenis' No. 6 of the 22nd March, 1866) as to "what international provision" is violated by the transportation of these so-called libertos from one Portuguese possession to another, namely, the answer that these libertos are, in fact, slaves, and that they do not fall within the category of those slaves who are permitted, under the provisions of the Treaty, to accompany their masters.

The objection raised by Count Castro to bringing these so-called libertos before the Mixed Commission Court in order to ascertain whether they are going of their own free will, or not, to these islands, does not seem to be sound. The Count says that the possibility of taking the declarations of libertos before a Mixed Commission is not inserted among the provisions in the Annex C to the Treaty, and this is true; but the contention of Her Majesty's Government is, that whatever name the Portuguese authorities may impose upon these persons, they are, in fact, slaves, liable to be treated and to be sold as such during a particular and unexpired period; and it is on this ground that the bringing them before a Mixed Commission is to be justified.

The other argument of Count Castro, that the Portuguese Government must have labourers to develope the resources of the islands, is irrelevant; the answer clearly is, that no one disputes their right to do so, but that they must not export slaves under the name of labourers.

It is, I see also, a contention of the Portuguese authorities that if the passport describes these libertos "as bonâ fide household servants," it is not competent to the cruizer to look behind or beyond the passport; but I do not so read the Treaty, which has the expressions "slaves who are bonâ fide household servants, and who may be duly named and described as such in passports, &c.;" and these expressions, "being" and "who shall be bonâ fide household servants," are repeated more than once in the Articles of the Treaty. The existence of both conditions, therefore, (1) that they shall be bonâ fide household slaves, and (2) that they shall be so described in the passport, seems necessary to avoid the application of the Treaty to these persons; and I think it would be competent to the seizing officer to show that these slave-owners were not entitled to a passport, and that they had obtained it either through the agency of fraud or by the improvidence of the grantor.

Nevertheless, it is desirable for many reasons to avoid, if possible, having recourse to this expedient of bringing the libertos before the Mixed Commission Court, and I think the Portuguese Government should be apprised that it would be with very sincere regret that Her Majesty's Government would be driven to take this course; but that so notorious and flagrant has the present system become of carrying on a Slave Trade under the mask and pretext of transporting free men (against their will) from the main shore to the islands, that really no option will be left to Her Majesty's Government, unless the Portuguese Government do, out of regard to their own honour and duty, at once and effectually interfere, as it is to be yet hoped they will, to prevent and put down a system which practically renders the Treaty of no avail.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received September 24.)

Doctors' Commons, September 23, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit the despatches and letters, as marked in the margin,* which have been received from Mr. Vredenburg, Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda, and from the Admiralty, reporting the circumstances under which the Portuguese brig "Dahomey" has been detained by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," and brought for adjudication before the Mixed Commission Court established at that place, for having on board three slaves, and on suspicion that she was destined to be employed in Slave Traffic; and Mr. Egerton was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion upon the merits of this case, and more particularly as to whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Commissioner acted rightly in declining to refer to arbitration the question whether or not the owners of the "Dahomey" were entitled to compensation on account of the detention of their vessel.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the merits of this case, I am clearly of opinion that this vessel could not have been lawfully condemned upon the evidence (with which alone, of course, I am concerned) produced before the Commissioners. It is not necessary that I should enter into the question as to whether or no the captor was deceived by the statement of the interpreter, or whether the three men alleged to be slaves gave two different accounts at the time of capture and at the time of their examination before the Commissioners.

With respect to the question whether the owners of the "Dahomey" were entitled to compensation, and the construction of the IXth and Xth Articles of the Treaty, and the VIIth Article of Annex B (3rd July, 1842, Hertslet, vol. vi, page 625, &c.), I am of opinion that, in the first place, if the captain's statement was admitted as credible evidence, as I understand it to have been, the replies of the master of the "Dahomey" to the questions put by the captain with respect to these men were such as to show, in the language of the VIIth Article of the Annex B, "that the captain had been led into error by the fault of the master or commander of the detained vessel," and that therefore the detained vessel was not, according to the provision of the same Article, entitled to receive compensation for seizure; and, in the second place, I think that the "extraordinary number of water-casks or of other vessels for holding liquid" (Article IX), for which the master did not produce a proper specific certificate, did bring the case, as the British Commissioner thought, under the provisions of the Xth Article of the Treaty, and therefore disentitled the owners of the prize to compensation.

With respect to the question whether Her Majesty's Commissioner acted rightly in declining to refer to arbitration the consideration whether the owners of the "Dahomey" were entitled to compensation—having regard to the IVth and VIIth Articles of the above-mentioned Annex—I am of opinion that he acted wrongly, and that he was not authorized, either by the Treaty or by the special circumstances of the case, to take that course.

No. 148.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received October 23.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, October 23, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 23rd ultimo, respecting the case of the Portuguese barque "Dahomey," which was brought for adjudication before the Mixed Commission Court at Loanda, on a charge of being engaged in the Slave Trade, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two further despatches from Mr. Vredenburg (Nos. 21 and 22), inclosing a list of articles found on board the "Dahomey," and a translation of an award made in favour of the owners of that vessel by the Portuguese Commissioner and Arbitrator in Mr. Vredenburg's absence; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is provided by the Treaty (Lisbon, July 3, 1842, Annex B, 3), "that the Mixed Commissions are to decide upon the legality of the detention of such vessels as the cruizers of either nation shall, in pursuance of the same Treaty, detain." And, moreover, that "these Commissions shall judge definitively, without appeal, all questions which shall arise out of the capture and detention of such vessels."

If Her Majesty's Government were to adopt and act upon Mr. Vredenburg's opinion with respect to the alleged unreasonableness of the amount awarded in this case, it would practically be acting as a Court of Appeal from the sentence of the Commissioners. I do not think that Her Majesty's Government ought to take this course. I retain the opinion expressed in my former Report, that Mr. Vredenburg erred in refusing to refer to arbitration the question as to the construction of the Articles of the Treaty, and in withdrawing from the Commission; but I continue to think that he is right in saying that, according to the construction of Article X of the principal Treaty, and Article VII of the Annex B, the owners of the detained vessel were not entitled to compensation for her seizure.

Upon the whole, I venture to think that the best course which your Lordship could pursue would be to submit to the Portuguese Government that though Her Majesty's Government fully recognize their obligation to be bound by the sentence of the Commissioners, both generally and especially as to all questions of contested fact, they think it their duty to represent that in this case there appears to have been a misconstruction of the provisions of the Articles of the Treaty above mentioned, and that upon this misconstruction the decree for compensation in this case has been entirely founded. That Her Majesty's Government therefore desire to lay this question of principle before the Portuguese Government, hoping and believing that they will take the same view of it as that which has been taken by Her Majesty's Government, but nevertheless professing, should this unhappily not be the case, their readiness to be bound by the decision, however unjust they may think it, of the Arbiter who is called in under the provisions of the Treaty.

It would of course be proper to embody the statements of Mr. Vredenburg in a Memorial, though probably it would be thought inexpedient to annex the letters themselves.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 24.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 22, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of October, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon (Nos. 4, 8, 9, 12), calling attention to the habitual shipment and transport of slaves under the name of libertos on board the vessels of Messrs. Leatham and Bailey, of Hull, the owners of the steamers plying under contract with the Portuguese Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that Messrs. Leatham and Bailey stated, in reply to Mr. Lytton's warning of the risk they ran in continuing to carry slaves on board their vessels, that they considered that the Portuguese authorities, and not the owners of the steamers, should be held responsible by Her Majesty's Government for the passengers conveyed on board their vessels; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether these British contractors, notwithstanding their vessels being in the employ of the Portuguese Government, do not render themselves amenable to British laws for carrying these so-called libertos on board their ships.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not able satisfactorily to answer the questions put to us without being furnished with a copy of the contract that now exists between Messrs. Leatham and Bailey and the Portuguese Government. If, by the contract, Messrs. Leatham and Bailey are to navigate the ships, employing and paying the captains and crews, and merely carrying such persons and things as they are required to carry by the Portuguese Government under the contract, and assuming, as we do, from the statements submitted to us, that the libertos are really slaves, we are of opinion that Messrs. Leatham and Bailey do render themselves amenable to the provisions of the British laws by carrying the libertos on board their ships. If, however, by the contract, Messrs. Leatham and Bailey charter their ships absolutely to a Portuguese Company, and that Company, under contract with the Portuguese Government employ the ships to carry the libertos, although the vessels might be forfeited and liable to be seized and brought for trial before a Mixed Commission Court, yet Messrs. Leatham and Bailey would probably not be personally amenable to the provisions of the British laws.

We think the best course will be to request that a copy of the contract shall be sent, so that the matter may be further considered and a satisfactory judgment framed upon the question.

The precise connection of Messrs. Leatham and Bailey with the Portuguese Company should also be ascertained.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 22, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 18th ultimo, which your Lordship had received from Mr. Stearns, connected with the case of the "Agnes," which was seized in Delagoa Bay, in 1862, by the Portuguese authorities.

Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon (No. 15), and a letter, dated the 10th ultimo, which was recently addressed to Mr. Stearns, together with a Memorandum which has been drawn up at the Foreign Office upon this subject; and he was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That it must be taken to be established upon the papers before us that the "Agnes" continued her voyage up the King George River against the remonstrances of the Portuguese authorities. Mr. Stearns, though he endeavours to explain the transaction, admits that he refused to go to the Portuguese Governor when sent for, and seeks inferentially to justify it by denying the right of the Portuguese to the territory and jurisdiction at the mouth of the river. But it is clear the English Government have recognized and admitted the right and jurisdiction of the Portuguese to this extent, though to what extent inland this right and jurisdiction extends is not clear.

On the whole, therefore, we think the "Agnes" was in the wrong in the outset of the dispute.

The seizure of the vessel and the ill-treatment of the crew appear originally to have been the acts of Kaffirs, at a distance up the river beyond the Portuguese jurisdiction; but it is not made out that this was done by the Portuguese authorities.

On the whole, we cannot see sufficient justification, upon the evidence before us, for a demand for reparation by the British Government upon the Government of Portugal on behalf of Mr. Stearns.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 7, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that Mr. Lindsay, formerly Member for Sunderland, had requested your Lordship again to submit to the Law Officers of the Crown his request for the official support of Her Majesty's Government, which has hitherto, under the opinion of our predecessors, been withheld from him, in respect of his claim, and those of other British subjects, arising out of their connection with the Royal Union Mercantile Company of Portugal.

That your Lordship having acceded to this request, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed to transmit to us the accompanying printed papers on the subject, and to refer us at the same time to the Reports of the Law Officers of the dates mentioned in the margin;* and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the propriety of Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon being instructed to afford his unofficial support to the claimants.

Some further correspondence which has passed with Her Majesty's Mission at Lisbon since the date of the printed papers was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we entirely agree with the late Law Officers in the opinions expressed by them in their Reports of the 28th and 29th July, 1864, and in the reasons on which those opinions are founded.

It appears that subsequent to those Reports Mr. Lindsay, on the 3rd June, 1865, in a letter addressed to Her Majesty's Government, stated that the Courts of Portugal had at last decided that the debentures issued in his favour by the Royal Union Company of Lisbon must be paid with interest, and that they had a preference claim upon all the assets of the Company; and urging the Government to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to ask the Portuguese Government that means might be placed at the disposal of the holders of those debentures to carry into effect the decision of the Court.

Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon was thereupon instructed by Her Majesty's Government to communicate with the Portuguese Government with the view of obtaining for Mr. Lindsay the full benefit conferred upon him by the Decree in question, and generally to do, unofficially, what he properly could to promote an early settlement of his claims in regard to these debentures.

Mr. Lytton, in a long and detailed despatch of the 24th June, 1865, written in reply to those instructions, explained that Mr. Lindsay's letter of the 3rd June was not quite accurate, and that the verdict of the Portuguese Court, referred to by Mr. Lindsay, had not been obtained by that gentleman and was not in his favour, but that he had recently made over to the London and Brazilian Bank, established at Lisbon, the whole of those papers, and that the Bank, and not Mr. Lindsay, was then the creditor of the Company and, as holders of such debentures, had, in that capacity, sued the liquidating Committee of the Company for payment, and had obtained in their favour, and not in Mr. Lindsay's, the verdict of which a copy had been transmitted by Mr. Lindsay to Her Majesty's Government. Mr. Lytton, in the same despatch, also explained the steps that were being taken for realizing, by sale, the three steamers belonging to the Company, and stated, in substance, that there was reason to believe that the Company or the Liquidating Committee were purposely delaying the sale and so preventing the realization of funds out of which the debentures might be satisfied; and that he (Mr. Lytton), assuming and believing that the Portuguese Government had authority to insist on the affairs of the Company being wound up within a period of time, had spoken privately and unofficially to Count d'Avila in furtherance of what appeared to him the very reasonable wishes expressed by the Representative in Lisbon of Mr. Lindsay and by the then holders of the debentures.

Subsequent despatches from that date down to the 26th February last from Her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Lisbon show that to that date nothing of importance had been done and that the ships were still unsold, notwithstanding the urgent private and unofficial appeals and remonstrances made by the Minister to the Portuguese Government. This delay in effecting the sale of the vessels is wholly unexplained in the papers before us, and the consequent loss from the deterioration of the vessels is obviously great and will probably fall on the debenture holders. But we are of opinion that these facts do not afford any ground for Her Majesty's Government to interfere officially on behalf of Mr. Lindsay or any other debenture holders.

The present holders have established in the Portuguese Courts the validity of the debentures in their hands against the Company, and they can only, as it appears to us, resort to the laws of that country for the purpose of enforcing payment of the amount of them against the assets of the Company. Neither Mr. Lindsay nor any other person is, as we think, entitled to claim that Her Majesty's Government shall interfere officially on the subject and insist on payment or on any particular course of action being adopted by the Portuguese Government.

We think, therefore, that it will be proper that instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Representative at Lisbon to continue to give any assistance in his power, by friendly offices, to Mr. Lindsay or to the present debenture holders, but not officially to interfere in this matter with the Portuguese Government.

We have, &c.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 13.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 12, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 3rd of November last, reporting my opinion upon certain questions which had arisen out of the contemplated marriage at the British Consulate at Königsberg, of an Englishman with a Jewess, a Prussian subject, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me further correspondence which has passed on the subject, from which I should see that the marriage has been celebrated at the Consulate; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make on the matter. My previous Report, and the correspondence on which it was founded, was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the general question of the duty of the Consul with respect to these marriages, I adhere to the opinion expressed in my former Report, to which I crave leave to refer.

With regard to this particular case, I do not advise your Lordship that any further instructions should be sent to Lord Napier; but it would be, perhaps, expedient that the parties to this marriage should be apprized by the Consul that after reading the letter of M. de Bismarck, I am of opinion that they would act wisely in even now going through the forms prescribed by the law of Prussia for a marriage between a Christian and a Jewess.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received April 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence which has been forwarded to the Foreign Office by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin, on the subject of a complaint made by the British residents at Memel against the enaction by the Prussian clergy of baptismal fees for the infants of British subjects. That in consequence of this complaint Lord Napier addressed an inquiry to the Prussian Government with regard to the position of the Anglican Church in Prussia, and the validity of registration by its ministers. That Lord Napier has now received a reply on the subject; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which may suggest themselves to me on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the complaint of the British subjects was, that they were compelled to have their children baptized by Prussian clergymen, that is, by ministers who do not belong to their church, and to pay fees for the same, there would be ground for a strong remonstrance by Her Majesty's Government against such a breach of comity as would be inflicted by a law or custom of such extreme intolerance and illiberality; but if I am to take—as I think I am bound to do at present—the letter of M. Thile to Lord Augustus Loftus, as the true exposition of the Prussian law upon this subject, the complaint does not seem to be well-founded.

It appears that the English Church is not so recognized by the Prussian law as to permit the registries of the English clergymen to be received as evidence in the Civil Courts of Justice, of the facts recorded in them, and that therefore, for the purposes of such evidence, the registration must be made according to the Prussian law, which law requires that all entries respecting births, baptisms, and the like, shall be made by Prussian clergymen.

Moreover, it appears from the letter of M. Thile that it is competent to British subjects who are naturalized in Prussia, by obtaining a certificate from the English Ambassador or Consul, to produce the evidence necessary for civil purposes, relative to their birth or baptism in Prussian Courts, without having recourse to baptism by Prussian clergymen.

It may be a subject worthy of your Lordship's consideration whether an endeavour should not be made to induce the Prussian Government to include the English Church among those religious communities whose corporate character is recognized by the State; but, apart from this general consideration, I do not think that the complaint of these particular persons calls for any intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 31, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th of May instant, stating that with reference to our letter of the 24th of May instant, reporting our opinion upon the order issued by the Austrian Government respecting the exemption from capture of merchant-ships belonging to belligerents granting reciprocal exemption to Austrian vessels, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us an accompanying note from the Prussian Ambassador at this Court, inclosing a similar order which had been issued by the Prussian Government; and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to make upon the Prussian Order.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the observations which we had the honour to make in our former Report with respect to the proposal of the Austrian Government, appear to us in great measure applicable to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue with respect to this communication from the Prussian Government.

It would seem to us imprudent to do more than formally acknowledge the receipt of this communication; and we must observe that the Decree is couched in language by no means free from ambiguity, with respect to the proposed treatment of neutral vessels in time of war.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin, inclosing an Order published in Prussia respecting the treatment of Austrian merchant-vessels during the present war; and Mr. Layard was to inclose also a despatch referred to by the Ambassador, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to make upon the order in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that the Prussian Order calls for any observations on the part of Her Majesty's Government. It correctly recapitulates the provisions of the Declaration of Paris, and makes an addition to them for the purpose of the present war, which concerns the present belligerents only, and does not affect the commerce of neutral States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we beg leave to refer to the Reports of the Law Officers of the 24th and 31st of May, with respect to the official declarations of the belligerents in this war on the subject of the exemption of merchant-ships from the effects of belligerent operations.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received October 6.)

Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose the accompanying despatches and papers which have been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (Nos. 234, 248), on the subject of a claim for compensation made by Mr. John Cliff, a British subject acting as manager to a Mining Company in Moravia for losses which he has sustained at the hands of the Prussian forces invading that country; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to what steps, if any, should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the principle of international law which Her Majesty's Government have been advised to apply to cases of this kind which occurred during the American civil war was the following; namely, that when a neutral subject has been domiciled in the country of a belligerent, and carrying on commercial business therein, he must be treated, with respect to injuries done by the armies of either belligerent to his property, as being in the same category as a native subject of the State in which he was domiciled, and that the official interference of Her Majesty's Government ought only to be exerted when the redress to which a native subject was entitled had been denied to him. In the present case I think the most expedient course would be to apprise Mr. Cliff that he must make his own application for redress to the Prussian Government, and use the same means as he may be legally advised it would be proper for an Austrian subject to use whose property had been injured in the same circumstances. That the fact of his being domiciled and carrying on a commercial establishment in the country places him, so far as this particular question is concerned, on the same footing as a native subject of Bohemia; at the same time Her Majesty's Government will instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Berlin to assist, according to his discretion, and without making a demand as of right, the application of Mr. Cliff.

Mr. Cliff, however, must distinctly understand that if the Prussian Government should contend that he must be treated, so far as this claim is concerned, as an Austrian subject, Her Majesty's Government would be unable to deny the right of the Prussian Government to maintain this position.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st of May ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Messrs. Nell and Co.,* respecting the seizure by the Russian authorities at Odessa of certain bonds of the Crédit Foncier of Poland belonging to their firm; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to his note of the 4th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit therewith a note which had been received from Messrs. Nell and Co., inclosing a copy of the evidence given by the Polish Advocate in their case, together with a copy of the "Times" of the 22nd of February, referred to in Messrs. Nell and Co.'s letter of the 28th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that Messrs. Nell and Co. have made out a strong primâ facie case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on their behalf with the Government of Russia. We are at present wholly at a loss to understand upon what ground the Russian authorities can justify the arbitrary seizure of these bonds in the hands of a bonâ fide foreign possessor of them for valuable consideration; more especially after the decision of the English Court of Chancery, in which they appear to have acquiesced. In any case, the offer of the British holder, "that the question between him and them (the Russian Government) should be decided according to Polish law established by the Russian Government," is one the fairness of which it seems difficult to gainsay or impugn.

We are of opinion that a representation on the subject, setting forth the principal facts of the case, and requesting proper redress, should be addressed by your Lordship to the Russian Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 27, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of November last, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 20th of June last he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying despatch from Sir A. Buchanan (No. 407, November 7), inclosing a copy of a note from Prince Gortchakoff explaining the course pursued by the Russian Government in regard to the seizure at Odessa of certain bonds of the Crédit Foncier of Poland, the property of Messrs. Nell and Co.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence respecting a somewhat similar case of a destruction of a bond of the Crédit Foncier of Poland, the property of Mr. H. Nicolls; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having carefully considered the papers relating to the complaints of Messrs. Nell and Co., and Mr. H. Nicolls, of the seizure and destruction of certain bonds of the Crédit Foncier of Poland by the Russian Government, we think that notwithstanding disputes as to certain facts connected with these cases, the claimants' proposal "that the questions between the claimants and the Russian Government should be decided according to Polish law established by the Russian Government" is so reasonable and fair that the Russian Government should be again urged to accede to it.

It seems to us that there can be but little question that the bonds which became the property of Messrs. Nell and Nicolls were stolen and brought to this country for the purpose of being disposed of. It may be assumed also that certain notices were issued and published in different journals and otherwise in Russia, and in England, and other countries, that such bonds had been stolen; but the claimants contend that they purchased their bonds (which are payable to bearer and transferable by delivery) bonâ fide for value; and after, as they believed, all questions as to the validity of the bonds had been settled by the judgment of the Court of Chancery, and by the delivery up of the bonds (for the detention of which actions had been brought in a Court of Law) by the Russian Consul-General, and others who had acted by his direction and authority in detaining them.

It is obviously impossible for us to determine whether many assertions contained in the letter of Messrs. Nell, and especially that of the 28th of May, 1866, explained, qualified, or denied, in the despatch of Prince Gortchakoff of the $\frac{\text{21st October}}{\text{2nd November}}$, 1866, are or are not correct; but we are of opinion that it is an act of injustice on the part of the Russian Government, while material facts are in dispute, and while the claimants contend that they are ready to prove that they are bonâ fide holders for value of their bonds, and entitled, according to the law (as expounded by a skilled witness in the course of the Chancery proceedings, and not then controverted), to recover the amount of such bonds from the Crédit Foncier of Poland,—to seize the instruments evidencing the title of the claimants, and prevent their having the opportunity of establishing their legal right to the amounts secured by such instruments. We do not understand why the proposal of the claimants (Messrs. Nell) already made, is characterized by Prince Gortchakoff as "parfaitement illusoire."

We think that in justice the claims should be determined at once by some Tribunal competent to try the question whether by the law of Poland, as established by the Russian Government, the claimants are entitled to be paid the amounts secured by the bonds.

Lincoln's Inn, May 22, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,* relative to disputes which have arisen as to the respective rights of certain parties to cut timber in the Mhine-loughee forests, a tract of land ruled over by the Chief of Chiengmai, who is himself a tributary of the King of Siam.

That the interference exercised by Her Majesty's Consulate at Bangkok in these disputes, so far as relates to the case of Mong Shuez Gan v. the Chief of Chiengmai, has already formed the subject of Reports by Her Majesty's Advocate-General, dated the 2nd December, 1864, and 25th August, 1865, to which Mr. Hammond was pleased to refer us. That those Reports were embodied in instructions to Her Majesty's Consul, who was informed in the despatch addressed to him on the 18th of September last (No. 45), that, as a compromise had been effected, Her Majesty's Government would abstain from offering any further observations upon the case. That further disputes had, however, now arisen, of which the particulars may be gathered from the complaints made by Messrs. Todd, Findlay, and others, to Her Majesty's Government, and the answers thereto of Mr. Consul Knox and Colonel Fytche, the Commissioner in the Tenasserim Provinces, now at home on leave.

That as it would be necessary to return an answer to Messrs. Todd, Findlay, and Co., Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take their memorial into consideration, and advise your Lordship as to what the nature of that answer should be; but that your Lordship would also wish to be furnished with our opinion as to the course from first to last pursued by Her Majesty's Consulate at Bangkok in those disputes, and as to any instructions which should be addressed to Consul Knox for his future guidance.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the questions now raised by the Memorial of Messrs. Findlay and others, we think it sufficient to observe that no interference of Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok appears to have taken place subsequently to the settlement, by a compromise for pecuniary consideration, of the dispute between Mr. Johnstone and Captain Burn and his Burmese partner: and as the questions which have since arisen between the latter parties and other British subjects claiming rights to cut wood in the disputed districts appear to be cognizable by the British Consular Courts under the Siamese Order in Council, we think those questions may be properly left to be so determined.

It does not seem to us that the conduct of Mr. Commissioner Fytche has been in any respect deserving of censure.

Upon the proceedings connected with the disputes between Mr. Johnstone and the persons under whom he claimed, and Captain Burn, and Mong Shuez Gan, it is more difficult to form a satisfactory judgment. It is not shown that any person filling any official position in connexion with the British Consulate at Bangkok, or otherwise connected with the British Government, was directly or indirectly cognizant of the bribe which seems to have been offered by Captain Burn and his partner to the Siamese Prince, by whom the inquiry into these disputes was conducted. Were it otherwise, such conduct would have merited the severest reprehension and the most condign punishment. But as this is not alleged to have been the case, the sole question is whether Sir R. Schomburgk was justified in interfering, not (indeed) to obtain a reversal of any judicial or quasi-judicial decision (for this, speaking with strict accuracy, he did not do), but to obtain a re-grant to Captain Burn and his partner of the privileges of which he considered them to have been arbitrarily deprived by a proceeding not entitled, in his judgment, to the respect due to a bonâ fide legal decision.

It is extremely difficult for us to form any opinion either as to the validity of the original title under which Captain Burn and his native partner claimed, or as to the existence or non-existence of adequate grounds for holding that title forfeited or lost, if originally valid, or as to the true character of the proceedings before the Siamese Prince and his assessors, and of the decision said to have been pronounced by them. It is sufficient to say that, on all these points, we are quite disposed to accept and rely upon the statements and explanations contained in Mr. Knox's Report (Inclosure No. 1 in his letter to Earl Russell, June 27, 1865, No. 30); and we are satisfied that the true motive for Sir R. Schomburgk's interference was his desire to prevent what he honestly considered to be an arbitrary confiscation of valuable rights granted to a British subject, especially in a case in which the substantial parties to the controversy were British subjects on both sides, who (if they had been openly and directly litigating against each other) would have been subject to British and not to Siamese jurisdiction. Nor do we perceive that the new grant which was actually made, by means of Sir R. Schomburgk's influence, to Captain Burn and his partner, could practically have had the effect of defeating, in a British Court, any prior valid title which might have been obtained from the same quarter by Mr. Johnstone, or by those under whom Mr. Johnstone claimed.

Upon the whole it does not appear to us that Sir R. Schomburgk's conduct was deserving of censure.

We are of opinion, nevertheless, that, as a general rule, it would be better if the British Consul, who fills a judicial office and character, did not interpose his influence with the native authority, either to induce grants of land, or of privileges connected with land, to be made to one person rather than another, or to control the course of any legal or quasi-legal proceedings, in the result of which the interests of British subjects may be directly or indirectly concerned.

The local law, whether well or ill-administered, and whether the titles depending on it are thereby rendered more or less precarious, must prevail in all questions relating to land in Siam; and British subjects acquiring, or seeking to acquire, interests in such land, must submit to all the local conditions and infirmities of tenure.

If the parties to any such litigation, or if the questions involved in it, are (as in the present case) such that the Consul may himself be liable to be called upon to discharge judicial duties concerning the same matters, the inconvenience (not to say the impropriety) of any previous extra-judicial interference by him in favour of either party, becomes very apparent. But this general must be subject to exceptions where cases arise of plain oppression, or grave miscarriage of justice, which, upon public and international grounds may properly be made matters of remonstrance and complaint as between Government and Government; and in a country such as Siam, such exceptional cases may possibly be more liable to occur than in more civilized countries.

The views thus expressed by us agree in substance with those of the Queen's Advocate in his two former Reports upon this subject.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January , 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 23rd instant, on the subject of the announcement made by the Spanish Government that they would treat as pirates the crews of privateers cruizing under certain specified conditions with Chilean letters of marque, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir J. Crampton upon that subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these instructions into consideration, together with the previous papers, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the proposed draft is proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the draft letter of your Lordship to Sir J. Crampton appears to me right and proper to be sent. I have, however, ventured to suggest certain additions to it.

The conduct of the United States in their war with Mexico, in 1846, with respect to privateers) which forms the principal addition), was not present to my mind when I reported upon this subject; but I am happy to find that this precedent, when closely examined, as well as the one supplied by your Lordship in 1839, strongly confirms the opinion which I had the honour to express upon the general subject.

I have added the name of the Spanish writer Riquelme to the list of Spanish writers.

Your Lordship will find in Lawrence's Wheaton (edited 1865, page 255) that Riquelme expresses himself very strongly against this claim on the part of Spain.

Sir, Foreign Office, January 17, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that, in the inquiries which have been made respecting vessels supposed to be destined to be employed as privateers in the war between Spain and Chile, it has been ascertained that various vessels are building and arming in this country ostensibly for the service of foreign Governments not at present engaged in hostilities, for the construction and military equipment of which vessels the permission of Her Majesty's Government has neither been applied for nor obtained; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government could or should detain such vessels from proceeding to sea, unless the previous consent of Her Majesty's Government shall have been sought and obtained for such equipment and armament.

A copy of a letter on this subject which, by your Lordship's direction, Mr. Hammond addressed some days to the Home Office,* but to which no answer had yet been received, was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is no law in this country by which the building or equipment of ships of war within British territory for the use of foreign non-belligerent Powers, without Her Majesty's consent, can be prevented; and if any practice has in past times prevailed on the part of any foreign Powers, of communicating to the Government of this country any steps which they may have taken to procure such building or equipment, it must have been founded only upon their own views (very just and reasonable, in our opinion) of international comity.

The question seems to have been more than once considered in the early part of last century. Lord Fortescue, in his Reports (page 388), gives the following account of what then passed:—

"In Michaelmas vacation, 1721, the Judges were ordered to attend the House of Lords, concerning the building of ships of force for foreigners; and the question the Lords asked the Judges was, whether, by law, His Majesty has a power to prohibit the building of ships of war or of great force for foreigners in any of His Majesty's dominions? And the Judges were all of opinion (except Baron Mountague), Chief Justice Pratt delivering the opinion, that the King had no power to prohibit the same; and declared that Mountague said he had formed no opinion therein. The question was asked, on occasion of ships built and sold to the Czar being complained of by the Minister of Sweden. Trevor and Parker gave the same opinion in 1713."

Reference was made to this subject during the argument of the "Alexandra" case, in November 1863; and it is not at all probable that, if there had been any authority to the contrary, it would then have escaped attention.

We are therefore of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot by law detain such vessels as those mentioned in Mr. Hammond's letter (being vessels the equipment of which is not prohibited by the Foreign Enlistment Act), so as to prevent them from proceeding to see, unless the previous consent of Her Majesty's Government to their equipment has been sought and obtained: and that no such detention ought to be attempted.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 74, November 30, 1865), reporting the circumstances under which he had applied to Admiral Pareja for the restoration of the "Constancia," which was captured under the Chilean flag but said to belong to Mr. Alwyn, a British subject; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and inform your Lordship of my opinion whether, under the circumstances, your Lordship would be warranted in instructing Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid to support the representation which Admiral Pareja had promised to make to the Spanish Government in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case, I humbly advise your Lordship to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid to support, in the manner which he may think most expedient, the representation which Admiral Pareja had promised to make on behalf of the "Constancia."

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 20.)

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 21, January 11), inclosing a copy of the reply of the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs to the representation which, on receipt of my Report of the 18th ultimo, Sir J. Crampton was instructed to make to him on the subject of the Prize Court established by Admiral Pareja on board his flagship for the trial of vessels captured by the Spanish blockading squadron off Chile; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on Señor de Castro's reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the only part of Señor de Castro's reply which raises any question of law has reference to the constitution of the Prize Court.

He complains that the Government of a neutral State should require that such a Court should be presided over by a Civil Judge of sufficient experience—and asserts that no neutral nation has anything to say as to the category or class to which such Judge should belong, and that, according to the Spanish Law, it is proper to appoint naval Commanders to decide questions of prize, subject to an appeal from their decision to the Council of State. With respect to this position it is to be observed that there is in principle a great difference between the Prize Court and the ordinary Municipal Tribunals of a State. To the latter the subject of a foreign State necessarily and naturally submits himself while he is within the territory. To the former the foreigner, being neutral, is not, on the high seas, naturally subject. His vessel is permitted by his natural protector, his Sovereign, to be seized and brought by force within the territory of the foreign State upon the condition that the question of the lawfulness of the seizure be tried by the principles of International Law applied by a competent Court to his case. It is manifest that, in the competency of this Court, the neutral has a deep and peculiar interest, an interest recognized by the reason of the thing, by many Treaties, and by universal practice.

It is true that the Judge of this Court is appointed by the State of the captor, and that it is within the abstract competence of that State—however inconvenient and contrary to modern usage the course may be—to appoint a military or naval officer a Judge of a Prize Court, provided that he possesses the adequate knowledge of international jurisprudence which the neutral is entitled to expect and the application of which he has a right to demand, not only in the Court of Appeal but in the Court of the first instance.

But it is certainly not competent to the State of the captor to appoint one of the officers of the naval squadron, by a ship of which the neutral is captured, to be the Judge of the lawfulness of that capture. All reason, as well as authority, is opposed to such a practice. The Spanish jurist Bello puts the objection clearly: "Para que la presa maritima dé un titulo auténtico de propiédad, trasferible á los neutrales ó al represador, es necesaria, segun la práctica mas general de las naciones modernas, la adjudicacion de un tribunal, que debe pertenecer al Soberano del captor, y residir en el territorio de este Soberano, ó de sus aliados.

"La necesidad de los juzgamientos de presas nace principalmente del peligro de que en el ejercicio del derecho de captura se confundan las propiedades neutrales con las enemigas por error ó malicia de los captores. Es evidente que si el juicio de la legitimidad de las presas se dejase á estos, la guerra se convertiria en un sistema de pillaje, y la propiedad de aquellos que nada tienen que ver con la guerra, correria no menor peligro que la propiedad de los beligerantes."*

To the same effect is the celebrated answer made by Her Majesty's Government to the demands of Prussia in 1753 (called by Montesquieu "réponse sans réplique"), which has since been universally acknowledged as a most correct exposition of international law:—"By the Maritime Law of nations, universally and immemorially received, there is an established method of determination, whether the capture be or be not lawful prize. Before the ship or goods can be disposed of by the captors there must be a regular judicial proceeding, wherein both parties may be heard, and condemnation thereupon as prize, in a Court of Admiralty, judging by the law of nations and Treaties. The proper and regular Court for these condemnations is the Court of that State to whom the captor belongs."†

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 26, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters from the Spanish Minister at this Court, respecting certain vessels which are fitting out in this country, and supposed to be intended for use as privateers against Spain, and respecting which inquiries are being made through the Home Office and Treasury.

Two letters from the Admiralty relative to one of the vessels, the "Independencia," and two from the Home Office, relating to other vessels which were supposed to be fitting out as Chilean privateers, were also inclosed.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any steps can be taken in the matter.

We also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of yesterday's date, forwarding the statutory declaration inclosed in M. de Molin's letter of the 25th instant, which was accidentally omitted in Mr. Hammond's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the declaration of Juan Gavaron, which is the only evidence of any kind accompanying Mr. Hammond's letter, purports merely to state his belief, founded upon information received from persons not named, whom he "believes to be truthful." Even if the facts of which he proceeds to state his belief would amount to an offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act, it is clear that his belief alone is not even primâ facie evidence of the truth of these facts. Nor can credit be given to the information which he states himself to have received, unless it assumes the shape of definite statements by persons accepting the responsibility of what they allege, and showing what are their means of knowledge.

The substance, however, of the information to which Señor Gavaron deposes is that the "Independencia" is a ship of war lately purchased by the Peruvian Government, and now about to sail from this country with a crew many of whom are trained as soldiers.

It is added that she is believed to be intended "eventually" to "cruize against and prey upon Spanish commerce." If Spain were now at war with Peru this might be important. But if (as we suppose) Spain is not at war with Peru, we do not see how Her Majesty's Government could, even with better evidence, act upon the mere apprehension by the Spanish Government of "eventual" hostilities, as a reason for stopping a ship of war purchased and manned in this country by the Peruvian Government while still at peace.

Upon the whole, we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to detain any of these vessels upon the materials now before us.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Home Office,* together with previous correspondence,† on the subject of the vessel "Pampero" or "Tornado," which was supposed to be fitting out to be used as a privateer in the Chilean service; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, in conjunction with those inclosed in his letter of the 17th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 27, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Thompson, Bonar, and Co., requesting that, in the event of hostilities taking place between Spain and Peru, Her Majesty's Government will take such steps as may be necessary to prevent any obstacle being offered to the shipment of guano by British subjects from the Chincha Islands; and to request that we would take this letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion on this subject, and more especially as to how far Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering, by force or otherwise, to protect the produce of the Chincha Islands, which is mortgaged to British subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the assumed event of hostilities between Spain and Peru, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in interfering by force to protect from the belligerent operations of Spain the produce of the Chincha Islands, which is mortgaged to British subjects.

But we think that the good offices of Her Majesty's Government might very properly be used with the Spanish Government (as requested by Messrs. Thompson, Bonar, and Co., in the concluding paragraph of their letter), for the protection of the interests of British subjects in this property, so far as may be consistent with the exigencies of those warlike operations which the Spanish Government may consider it necessary to undertake.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 29, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th January instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Spanish Minister at this Court, inclosing two depositions, together with a letter from the Admiralty, relating to the Peruvian ship "Independencia;" and to request that we would take these papers into our immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether any steps could properly be taken on the statements made by the deponents.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day, inclosing a letter from the Spanish Minister, with two depositions made by deserters from the Peruvian frigate "Independencia," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, to be considered with that letter, a letter from the Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires, acknowledging the "Independencia" as a Peruvian ship of war; a letter from the Admiralty, reporting that the "Independencia" left Greenhithe in the afternoon of the 26th instant; and a letter to the Spanish Minister, dated the 27th instant, acknowledging his letter of the previous day, acquainting him that the Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires had acknowledged the "Independencia" as a Peruvian ship of war, and that she went to sea on the 26th, in the afternoon; and stating further that inquiry would be immediately made as to whether any steps could be taken on the depositions inclosed in his letter.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that with reference to his letter of the 27th and 28th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Home Office, containing particulars of certain vessels supposed to be acting in concert with the "Independencia;" and to request that we would take the same into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship whether any steps could be taken with reference to these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as it now appears that the "Independencia" actually sailed from this country on the same day on which these depositions were received, we can only state our view of the course which it would have been proper for Her Majesty's Government to adopt had the ship been still within British jurisdiction. Upon the evidence now offered (supposing it to be true), we think it must be assumed that British subjects and others have in this country been "procured to enter, or engage, to enlist, or to serve, or to be employed," in the sea service of Peru, on board the "Independencia," with a view to warlike operations on the part of that ship against Spanish vessels, during the voyage on which she was then about to sail; and that arms and ammunition have been taken on board of her with the like purpose in this country.

In these circumstances, we no longer consider it important that Her Majesty's Government had not received official information of actual or contemplated hostilities between Spain and Peru except from the representations of the Spanish Minister. The evidence, if true, is, in our opinion, primâ facie sufficient to establish a violation of the 2nd and 7th sections of the Foreign Enlistment Act; the latter involving a forfeiture of the ship, &c., unless she was entitled to be recognized by Her Majesty as a Peruvian man-of-war; in which case the offence might come within the 8th section. We think the evidence would also have been sufficient to authorise Her Majesty's Government to detain the ship, under the 5th section of the Act, and to prevent her from proceeding to sea on her voyage, with any of the persons on board whose enlistment had been illegally procured; whether she may have been liable to forfeiture under the 7th section or not. If proceedings had been taken under the 5th section, information on oath must have been laid before the proper officers of Her Majesty's Customs; but we should not have hesitated to advise your Lordship (under whatever section it might ultimately have been determined to proceed) to give immediate orders for the detention of this ship, if she had not already left this country. As, however, she is now beyond British jurisdiction, we are not aware of any steps which can usefully be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

Since writing the above, we have read the information of Williamson and Evans; but we think that information scarcely sufficient to warrant action on the part of Her Majesty's Government. We suggest that an attempt should be made immediately to obtain some deposition from the "workmen and others" from whom the information was elicited, and that further inquiries should be prosecuted without a moment's delay.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 30, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th instant he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform your Lordship whether orders may properly be sent to the authorities of the Customs at the outports of the United Kingdom to detain the "Independencia" if she should put into any of them, and to the Admiralty and Home Departments to assist by every means at their disposal, even by the employment of force, to support the Custom-house Officers in execution of these orders. That if this should be our opinion your Lordship would be glad to be informed of the exact terms in which the orders to the Custom-house should be framed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to use force for the detention of the "Independencia," if she should, after having once put to sea, and left Her Majesty's territory, again return within Her Majesty's jurisdiction.

Having been acknowledged by the Representative of Peru in this country as the property of his Government, and sailing (as we must assume she now does) not only under the Peruvian flag, but under a regular Commission from the Peruvian Government, we conceive that if she should now return within Her Majesty's jurisdiction it will be in the character of a public ship of war of an independent State. If so, she cannot (without previous notice, at all events, to the Peruvian Government) be treated as subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

The 5th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act may, perhaps, be capable of being applied in such a case. But without at present entering into the questions of law which may exist on that subject, we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to raise those questions by initiating any proceedings under the circumstances supposed.

Any person who may be in possession of sufficient evidence and may wish to initiate such proceedings, may raise these questions under such circumstances by laying a sworn information before the principal officers of Her Majesty's Customs.

The 8th section of the Act does not authorize Her Majesty to detain a foreign ship of war, but only makes certain acts, if done within this kingdom, to increase the warlike power of any such vessel, punishable as a misdemeanour.

To prevent misunderstanding we desire to add, that it by no means follows, from the immunity from territorial jurisdiction conceded by international courtesy to ships which have once been duly commissioned as public ships of war by a foreign State, either within the foreign territory or on the high seas, that any like immunity would attach to ships built in this country for the war service of a foreign Government before they had once actually passed beyond the limits of British jurisdiction. It would be a very dangerous doctrine, and one unsupported (as far as we are aware) by authority, to hold that by the mere acquisition of property in a ship, locally situate in Great Britain, which had never left this country, and which before such acquisition was not exempted from our laws, and by granting to any officer a commission to take the command of such ship while still in British territory, with a view to her employment as a public ship of war, a foreign Government could deprive Her Majesty of the power to enforce her own laws against such a ship before it had ever sailed out of a British port. We do not, as at present advised, think that the character of a public ship of war, of a foreign Government, could attach for this purpose to such a ship (without the consent and recognition of Her Majesty) till it had once actually passed beyond British jurisdiction. But when it once had gone out of British jurisdiction its subjection to British law would have finally ceased; and the right of the foreign State to invest it with the character of a public ship of war, and with all the privileges belonging to that character, would then become perfect.

Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, with reference to our Report of the 31st ultimo, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Brest, respecting the British portion of the crew of the Peruvian man-of-war "Huascar," now lying in that port; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this despatch into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not see what steps can be taken in this case beyond those (if any) which it may be competent to Her Majesty's Consul at Brest to take under the French law, for the purpose of obtaining the release of these men, unless, indeed, it should appear to your Lordship to be proper for Her Majesty's Government to furnish the means of repaying the three months' pay said to have been advanced to them, in which case we understand the captain of the "Huascar" to be willing to discharge them.

Until the further information promised by the Consul has been received, it is impossible for us to judge whether these men, or any of them, have been misled into taking service on board the "Huascar" by false representations as to the nature of that service, or whether they, or the captain of the vessel, were or was guilty, when in this country, of any violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

It does not, at present, appear whether they were or were not enlisted for any war-service; if not, there cannot have been any violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act; and, even if that Act has been violated, no proceedings founded thereon can be taken against any of the persons while the ship is in French waters.

It is equally impossible for us to judge, upon the present materials, whether the men have or have not any right, in consequence of misrepresentation, ill treatment, or otherwise, to claim their discharge, either with or without repayment of the three months' pay which they are said to have received.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury, dated the 8th instant, together with its inclosures, relative to the vessel "General O'Higgins" and "Chucaboca," which are being built in the Thames by Messrs. In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 15.)

Doctors' Commons, February 15, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her

1866

Majesty's Minister at Madrid, inclosing a communication made to him by the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which he announces the intention of his Government to maintain in certain cases the Prize Courts established by Admiral Pareja on board his flag-ship; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not easy to understand what is the exact proposition with respect to prizes contained in the letter of the Spanish Minister. Assuming, however, that the proposition is this, that in certain cases of urgent necessity the Spanish Admiral is to determine whether a neutral ship is to be detained without submitting the question of the lawfulness of her capture to the immediate adjudication of a regular Prize Court, to which adjudication the ship is hereafter to be entitled, the proposition is one which may be considered in the circumstances not unreasonable.

Although the argument that the exigencies of the belligerent are such as to render it difficult for him to discharge his obligation towards the neutral is not to be generally admitted, the answer to that argument being, as I have before observed, that in such a case the belligerent must abstain from exercising a right which is dependent on the fulfilment of these obligations, and must refrain from interrupting the commerce of the neutral.

Your Lordship should, I humbly think, direct Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid to express to the Spanish Government the sense in which they understand this proposition as to prizes; and that in no case can Her Majesty permit that a vessel belonging to one of her subjects shall be condemned, and his property confiscated, without the due sentence of a regular Tribunal, and the opportunity of a proper appeal.

I venture to add that inasmuch as Spain has certainly shown in many respects during this war great tenderness towards neutral interests, the representation of Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid might, perhaps, convey the desire of Her Majesty's Government to avoid as much as possible putting undue pressure upon Spain in her present difficulties, and their acknowledgment that in many respects she has endeavoured to lighten the severity of belligerent operations to the neutral.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 22.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 21st instant, with its inclosures, from the Board of Treasury, relative to the vessels "Tornado" and "Cyclone," which are supposed to be fitting out as privateers for the Chilean service. A letter from the Home Office of the 20th instant, relative to two other vessels which are fitting out at Blackwall for the use of the Chilean Government, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish yonr Lordship with our opinion as to whether any steps can properly be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the course taken with respect to the ships "Tornado" and "Cyclone" has been the proper one.

With respect to the two ships at Blackwall, we have no depositions before us; and although it appears to have been stated by some of the workmen employed by Mr. Green that these ships are for the Chilean Government, we have no means of judging how far the persons by whom this is "openly said," may be able and willing to substantiate that statement by legal evidence.

We think that the Solicitor for the Customs ought to be instructed to ascertain whether evidence of any equipment or fitting out of these vessels for the war service of the Chilean Government can be procured either from the persons of whom Mr. Savery (one of the examining officers of the Customs) made inquiries or otherwise.

So far as the law is concerned, we think that Her Majesty's Government and the Board of Customs should assume it to be in accordance with the argument for the Crown in the "Alexandra" case, and not as laid down by Chief Baron Pollock and Baron Bramwell.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 24.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 24, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that you had lost no time in making known to the Board of Treasury the observations contained in our Report of that day respecting certain vessels suspected of being designed for the Chilean service; and further stating that your Lordship had in the meanwhile received from the Board of Treasury the inclosed further letters respecting those vessels, and also respecting two other vessels under construction for the Spanish Government; and requesting that we would take those letters into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course to be pursued on the facts disclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken such letters into our consideration, and we have the honour to report—

That these papers still leave Her Majesty's Government without anything in the shape of depositions, tending to show that legal evidence of the alleged destination of the vessels in question for the war service (in one case) of the Chilean and (in the other case) of the Spanish Government can be obtained. We think it is extremely desirable that such evidence should be obtained; because, while a seizure without such evidence might entail failure in the legal proceedings by which it must be followed up, and consequent pecuniary liability, the information which the officers of the Custom-house have obtained seems (on the other hand) to be sufficient, to leave no doubt of the actual destination of the ships; and, under these circumstances, it is not easy to say that Her Majesty's Government would not be disregarding international obligations in allowing them to leave this country.

It occurs to us to suggest, for your Lordship's consideration, whether it might not be proper to address a direct communication to the Minister in this country of each of the belligerent nations, stating that Her Majesty's Government have received information leading them to believe that the ships said to be in course of preparation for the service of his Government are being fitted out for such service, and inquiring whether such information is correct. The steps to be afterwards taken might be considered, when the answers to these communications had been received.

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 28, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter, dated the 26th instant, from the Treasury, relative to the vessels "General O'Higgins," "Chucaboca," "Arapiles," and "Victoria," and reporting that orders had been issued for their detention.

A further letter from the Treasury, dated the 26th instant, relative to the vessel "Cyrus," which was suspected to be fitting out as a Chilean privateer, and which has been accordingly detained, but is now claimed by the Columbian Minister, and will be given up to him, was also inclosed.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a report from the Treasury, dated the 26th instant, relative to another vessel, the "Ironsides," which has been built at Birkenhead; and to request that we would take these these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which may properly be taken in regard to these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the information given to the officers of the Customs at Liverpool, and mentioned in their letter of the 24th instant, can be substantiated by legal evidence, there may be probably good grounds for detaining the "Ironsides;" although it is to be observed that it would be desirable to have independent evidence of the nature of her build and equipment, and not to rely solely on statements said to have been made by the commander, or "some person belonging to the vessel," even if verified by legal evidence, showing the person who made those statements to have some control over the ship.

At present we think that the information is not sufficient for Her Majesty's Government to take any action in this case.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 14, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform me that Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid was instructed, in conformity with my Report of the 15th ultimo, to acquaint the Spanish Government with the views of Her Majesty's Government relative to the intention expressed by the former to maintain, under certain circumstances, the Prize Courts established by Admiral Pareja on board his flag-ship.

Mr. Murray was pleased to transmit to me a despatch from Sir John Crampton, reporting a conversation which passed between Señor Bermudez de Castro and himself on this subject; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any further instructions should be sent to Sir John Crampton on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the explanation of Señor Bermudez de Castro renders it probable that little or no practical difficulty will arise with respect to British vessels; but I do not think it necessary or expedient that any further instructions should be sent to Sir John Crampton on the subject.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 17, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, with its inclosures, from the Board of Treasury, respecting an application which has been received by the Board of Customs from the Solicitors of the Spanish Minister at this Court, for permission to examine the Custom-house officers who were placed on board the "General O'Higgins" and "Chucaboca," with a view to proving that those vessels are intended for the use of the Chilean Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose to us a further letter from the Board of Treasury, dated the 13th instant, requesting to be informed what further steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the above-named vessels.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to inclose to us a draft of the answer which your Lordship proposes to return to the Board of Treasury, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as whether the proposed answer is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer proposed to be given by your Lordship to the Board of Treasury is, in our opinion, right and proper. The Chilean Minister having avowed that these ships are intended for the service of his Government, this fact may, of course, be assumed, as between the Spanish Government and the Government of Her Majesty; and no evidence can now be necessary to be taken for the purpose of proving it.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 20, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that simultaneously with our Report of the 17th instant, respecting the two Chilean vessels now under detention, the letter and inclosures on the same matter which he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us were received at the Foreign Office from the Treasury, and that before acting on our Report he was to request that we would inform your Lordship of our opinion whether the statements in these papers are of a nature to induce us to alter the opinion contained in our Report, which for convenience of reference was returned, with the papers to which it applies.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the statements contained in the additional papers now referred to do not lead us to alter the opinion expressed in our Report of the 17th instant. The depositions of Edward Nunn, Edward Clarke, and Edward Saville, would no doubt be sufficient primâ facie evidence that these vessels have been fitted out for the war service of the Chilean Government, if that were a matter still open to controversy. But the necessity of any such evidence appears to us to be superseded by the express admission of the Chilean Minister, whose undertaking that these ships shall not be allowed to leave the Thames without the permission of Her Majesty, renders a seizure under the Foreign Enlistment Act (even if sufficient legal ground were shown for such seizure) unnecessary for the protection of the Spanish Government, except in the very improbable event of the undertaking being itself broken. Strict watch must, of course, be kept over the vessels, and measures (if requisite) must be taken to prevent their leaving; but it does not seem to us either to be practically necessary in these circumstances to take proceedings against them under the Foreign Enlistment Act, or clear that such proceedings could be successfully taken.

No. 183.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 21, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying translation of a note addressed to the Spanish Minister at this Court, dated the 16th ultimo, and communicated to him by the latter, containing the views of the Spanish Government in regard to the conditions under which Chilean privateers would be treated as pirates.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, for our convenience, he was to inclose to us the paper referred to in the above note; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is necessary to state clearly the difference of opinion between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Spain upon this important subject.

The Spanish Government maintain that they have a right to treat as pirates all Chilean privateers duly commissioned by and carrying the flag of that State, unless the captain and the majority of the crew be composed of Chilean subjects.

Her Majesty's Government, on the other hand, maintain that the privateer derives her authority from the commission and flag, and that the condition required by the Spanish Government with respect to the composition of the crew is not warranted by international law; and that though it is competent to Spain or any other State to treat as pirates its own subjects serving on board a duly-commissioned foreign privateer, it is not competent to Spain, or any other State, so to treat the subjects of a foreign country; that, in fact, the regulation as to the number of the crew, who are to be the subjects of the State which commissions the privateer, is a regulation of municipal and not of international law.

These positions Her Majesty's Government have supported by arguments derived from principle, from practice, and from the authority of accredited writers upon international jurisprudence.

The Spanish Government, in this last despatch, allege that upon all these grounds Her Majesty's Government have failed to support their opinion.

It is proposed to examine the arguments upon which this assertion rests, in the order in which they are stated in the despatch.

1. The first argument is, that to deny to Spain the right of treating as pirates foreign subjects so serving on board privateers, is to deny to her the exercise of that jurisdiction which is the essential attribute of independent sovereignty.

It is very difficult to understand this argument. It is not contended by Her Majesty's Government that foreign subjects in the dominions or in the ships of Spain are not subject to the jurisdiction of that State. It is not contended that Her Majesty's subjects serving in the armies or fleets of the enemies of Spain are not subject, when captured by Spain, to be treated as prisoners of war. Either of these contentions would indeed be derogatory to the sovereignty of Spain; but it is contended that Spain cannot, by a private law of her own, whether that law be or be not identical with the private law of another State, change the character and alter the condition of a prisoner of war into the character and condition of a pirate.

It seems to be admitted by Spain that she is bound to treat foreign subjects taken in the army or navy of her enemy as what she calls "milites," as prisoners of war; but she contends that a different rule applies to foreign subjects serving in the privateers of the enemy. But upon what principle, when it is admitted that the privateer herself is entitled to be treated as a vessel of war? It is said that otherwise the foreign subject would be the subject of two Powers at once, namely, that of the State to which his original allegiance was due, and that of the State under whose commission he was fighting. But this is a transparent fallacy. So far as affects the belligerent, which is Spain in this instance, it has been already stated that he must be considered as a subject of the State of whom he is the military servant. And here must be noticed a confusion into which the writer of the despatch has fallen with respect to the bearing of the English Foreign Enlistment Act upon this question. It has never been argued by Her Majesty's Government that this municipal law in any way affected the rights of Spain in peace or in war; but it was argued that Spain could not insist upon the regulations of this municipal law as a reason for treating English subjects on board Chilean vessels as pirates.

While reasoning upon a mistaken view of this statute, and maintaining, justly, that no municipal law can affect international law, the writer of the Spanish despatch says: "Although England might declare those English subjects to be pirates who should form part of the crew of a foreign privateer, if such privateer were an enemy of Spain, and were captured, it is clear that Spain would not consider as pirates the English subjects she might find on board, if the captain and the majority of the crew were subjects of the Power which issued the commission.

To this proposition Her Majesty's Government entirely assent, but it is fatal to the whole argument of the writer upon the main subject of his despatch; for the position, that when a majority of foreigners form the crew of a privateer they are to be treated as pirates, is just as much the creature of municipal law as the position, that foreigners forming a minority of the crew may be treated as pirates by the State of which they are subjects. For, in fact, the former position is simply a provision contained in the Spanish and French Ordinances, the latter of which, it may be observed in passing, has varied from time to time as to the requisite number or proportion of the foreigners. Such provisions are not a portion of international law, and the legislation of a particular nation has no authority beyond its own territory. Then what are the other authorities? It will be found, when they are examined, that they rest upon the statement of Ortolan, a respectable modern writer, but not of the first class, nor a jurist by profession, and who founds his proposition upon the French Municipal Ordinance. It is true that De Pistoye and Duverdy express the same opinion; but, as has been already observed in a former Report, they cite, in support of it, no other authority than that of Ortolan.

It was stated, on the other hand, by Her Majesty's Government that no such position was to be found in the writings of any English or American jurists, or in the Orders issued by those Governments with respect to privateers, and this statement appears to be uncontradicted by the Spanish Minister.

It was further stated that the authority of many other writers,—among whom were enumerated the older jurists Bynkershoek and Abreu, and the modern Spanish jurists Pando and Riquelme,—was, directly or indirectly, opposed to this doctrine. It is replied that this is an error; and first, with regard to Bynkershoek, a passage is cited from one of his chapters (lib. i, chap. xvii) in his "Quæstiones Juris Publici," to the effect that the commander of a privateer sailing "sine codicillis sui Principis" is a pirate; and also another passage (though not expressly cited) is referred to, that one who sails under the orders "externi Principis" is in the same category.

It will be found, on examination of the chapters, and the context of the passages referred to, that Bynkershoek laid down no such doctrine as is contended for; but that his general reasoning, as well as his particular language, is most clearly adverse to it.

He has three chapters bearing on the subjec; one (chap. xvii) upon piracy—who are pirates? and three upon the subject of privateering. The passage, "sine codicillis," &c., is in the first of these chapters (page 127); and it is hardly too much to say, that if the whole chapter had been read, it never would have been cited.

The author begins by propounding the question, "Who are pirates?" and immediately answers by this definition: "Qui autem nullius Principis auctoritate, sive mari, sive terrâ, rapiunt, piratarum praedonumque vocabulo intelliguntur." This is the true international doctrine upon the subject. He proceeds to say that, according to the Dutch law, a Dutchman may not sail from a Dutch harbour or coast with the commission of a foreign Prince, "cum mandato externi Principis;" and continuing his argument, he adds that those who, under the authority of a foreign ("externi") Prince, "ad prædandum exeunt, piratarum nomine censendos esse; quia sic possent et non hostes deprædari, et alios Principes contra suum suscitare." He is here speaking of the case of a privateer belonging to a neutral subject (a thing not unknown in the times when he wrote), and not of a privateer belonging to the belligerent, and carrying the commission of the belligerent State.

In another part of the chapter (page 127) he deals with the question whether a foreign vessel, taken without a commission, while acting as a privateer, can be tried and punished by the country of the captor, and expresses his own opinion in the affirmative; and then he adds the passage cited by the Spanish Government, namely, "et nemo contradixerit, si sine codicillis Principis sui in nostros rapinam egerit; sed si ex mandato, cujus fines egressus dicitur, simile quid fecerit, magis dubitari posset."

He then refers to a dispute in 1667 between England and Holland, which had arisen in the case of vessels which, having letters of marque, continued, after peace was proclaimed, to act as belligerents. England contended that they should be tried by the State which gave the letters of marque; Holland contended that the State of the captor might deal with them; and he ends this discussion by the words, "Sed pirata quis sit, nec ne, inde pendet, an mandatum prædandi habuerit; si habuerit, et arguatur id excessisse, non continuo eum habuerim pro piratâ."

In his next chapter, "De Prædatoriâ privatâ" (chap. xviii), after describing the privateer as a vessel which individuals equip and arm, he says: "Quod autem Albericus Gentilis in libris 'De Advocatione Hispanicâ,' variis locis, etiam cum de jure, quod usu servatur ipsi sermo est, ejusmodi homines passim appellat piratas, nec alio, quam piratarum, loco habet, utique absurdius est, quam ut constitutâ disputatione refutari oporteat; quicquid enim illi agunt, agunt auctoritate publicâ, neque enavigant nisi ex mandato ordinum generalium," &c. The rest of the chapter is occupied with the law of prize as to the rights of privateers. The next chapter treats of the case of a ship without a commission, as privateer, making a prize, and considers to whom the prize shall belong. At the close of the chapter he again refers to the distinction between those "qui sine auctoritate publicâ" and "sine codicillis prædatum enavigant," and those who have a commission; upon the possession of which, duly granted, he throughout, from first to last, considers the lawful character of the privateer to depend.

The next authority impugned is that of Abreu.

The averment on the part of Her Majesty's Government was that in no part of the work of this Spanish writer was the position to be found, that a lawfully commissioned privateer could be treated as a pirate, because the captain and majority of the crew had been by birth subjects of a foreign State; and that the fact was remarkable because the question of a privateer, under a double Commission from two distinct States, was treated of (cap. 12, page 151), in which he speaks of the Commission as giving the authority to the privateer. No such position is now cited by the Spanish Minister. The passage referred to by him (cap. 1, N. 11, p. 9) asserts that it is not lawful for a subject, without a commission from his Prince, to make war, on account of the many inconveniences which would otherwise result, and that, according to the Spanish Ordinance, among the vessels which are lawful prize are those "which traverse the sea without the authority of any Prince or Sovereign State;" which is the "nullius Principis auctoritate" of Bynkershoek.

Next, with respect to Pando. It is said that he called the foreigners who commanded the South American privateers "filibusters," and said that no other name could be given to them. This is a strong instance of the evil of partial citation. What he really does say (page 427) is, that a privateer with two commissions was considered a pirate by the French Ordinances; and he adds that one of the abuses committed by the Republic of Buenos Ayres in her war with her ancient mother country, Spain, was entrusting the command of her privateers to foreigners, whose conduct, in the exercise of their authority, was such that they deserved no other character than that of filibusters. At page 429 this author says, "It is competent to each nation to give to its own privateers whatever rules it pleases. So far as these rules relate exclusively to subjects, no one can dispute the competency of the Sovereign to establish them; but this does not apply to foreigners: it has no authority to subject them to requisitions of any particular kind, except so far as the rules which it imposes are conformable to the universal law of nations, to general custom, or to Treaties."

Next, the authority of Riquelme (Wheaton, by Laurence, vol. i, p. 225). This author, Riquelme, refers to the Ordinances of Spain as being extremely severe upon the subjects of Spain; but, so far from recognizing the rule contended for as one of international law, he observes, "Besides, the taking of a commission for privateering from a foreign State, though its object be making prizes by incurring the risks of war, cannot be esteemed a proof of high morality, still it is very far removed from the crime of piracy."

Massé and even Hautefeuille are even of the same opinion. But there is another author (De Martens) of much continental celebrity (though adverse to many opinions of English jurists), who wrote, besides his great work upon international law, a special treatise upon privateering, "Essai concernant les Armateurs." He says, section xi, "At present all the Powers of Europe agree in these three points:—1. That whoever wishes to fit out a privateer must provide himself with letters of marque, or with a commission from one of the belligerent Powers, for want of which he may be treated and punished as a pirate, as well by those on whom he commits violence as also by his own Sovereign. 2. That a lawful privateer has, in strictness, a right to demand his prize to be adjudged to him, inasmuch as it is lawfully made; but also (3), That he can in no wise regard it as his property till it has been adjudged to him by a competent tribunal." And, at section xiii, "There is nothing that prevents the granting of letters of marque, even to the subjects of neutral or allied Powers who are able to solicit them; but, since it is contrary to neutrality to suffer neutral subjects to contribute by this means to the reinforcement of one of the belligerent Powers, and to the annoyance of the other, States generally prohibit their subjects from taking letters of marque from a foreign Power without the permission of their Sovereigns; and many Treaties oblige them also to prohibit their subjects from doing it, as well as to forbid every species of armaments on the enemy's account in their ports. However, the enemy is not justified in punishing them as pirates when they have letters patent (commissions) from one of the Powers with whom it is at war, although their ships may be confiscated" (pp. 43, 44).

To pass from the topic of authorities to that of Treaties.

The object for which the Treaty between England and the United States of America, and that of the United States of Mexico, was cited, seems to have been misunderstood by the Spanish Minister. The object was to prove that, when this particular composition of the privateer's crew was to be treated as imparting to the vessel the character of a pirate, it was necessary to make it the subject of this specific Convention between the nations by whom it was to be so considered, and that, accordingly, this was done in the Treaties referred to, which, if the doctrine had been universally recognized by international law, would have been unnecessary.

Then as to the practice.

It is no longer asserted that England assented, by tacit acquiescence, to this doctrine when propounded by the French Admiral in 1839, because the evidence that England then promptly and formally protested against the application of this doctrine to Her Majesty's subjects cannot be gainsayed.

The conclusion, therefore, to which these premises lead Her Majesty's Government is:—

1. That no infringement ("attentorio") of the sovereign rights of Spain is intended or attempted by Her Majesty's Government.

2. That the proposition for which the Spanish Government contend is opposed to the authority of jurists, considered numero vel pondere.

3. That it is a part of the municipal law of Spain applicable to the subjects of that kingdom only, by virtue of its own legislation.

4. That wherever it has been extended to the subjects of other States, it has been necessary to embody it in the specific provisions of Treaties, entered into for limited periods.

5. That it is not competent to Spain, in this war with Chile, to alter the law of nations and treat any duly commissioned privateers as pirates, to the injury of the subjects of neutral States who, if found on board commissioned ships of either belligerent, are liable to be treated as prisoners of war, as serving under the Government which issued the commission, but not as robbers upon the high seas.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received April 17.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 16, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a translation of a note, dated the 9th instant, from the Spanish Minister at this Court, together with its inclosures, calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the course pursued by the captain of an English mail-packet, in warning M. Sanguirico, a Spanish Diplomatic Agent and bearer of despatches who had taken a passage on board that vessel, that he would deliver him over to the authorities at any Peruvian port where the vessel might touch, should he be required to do so; and also to transmit to us papers relative to two questions which arose at the port of Islay during last year, in regard to the giving up of persons who were passengers on board English mail-packets, together with the correspondence which took place with Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, in consequence of an application which he received from the Peruvian Government for the surrender of certain Peruvian subjects who had sought refuge on board Her Majesty's ship "Shearwater."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was further directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Memorandum which has been drawn up at the Foreign Office, in connection with these matters; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand the Spanish Minister to complain of a notice given by Captain Wolcott, of the steamer "Pacific," to a passenger on board that ship, who is in a high diplomatic employment under the Queen of Spain, and who is also the bearer of despatches (to whom those despatches are addressed, or for what purpose they are written, does not appear), that he will be delivered up, under certain contingencies, to the Peruvian authorities. The language used is not very precise; but we understand those contingencies to be: (1) the entrance of the steamer within the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of Peru; and (2) a demand made by the authorities of that country, while the steamer is actually within those limits.

If this be Captain Wolcott's meaning, it appears to us that there is nothing in it contrary either to international law generally, or (in particular) to the principles asserted by this country in the case of the "Trent." The "Pacific" is a merchant-vessel, not exempt, by international law or usage, from the territorial jurisdiction of Peru while within Peruvian waters. She cannot, therefore, confer, while within those waters, upon any enemy of the Peruvian Republic whom she may be carrying, as a passenger or otherwise, a privilege or exemption which she does not herself possess.

The case of the "Trent" was entirely different. That vessel was on the high seas, carrying to a neutral country persons understood to be sent there on some political errand by the authorities of the Confederate States. She was not, when those persons were forcibly taken out of her by Captain Wilkes, within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States; and Captain Wilkes' manner of proceeding was such as would not have been justified by the usages of international law, even if the Commissioners or any despatches which they might have been carrying had been contraband of war. Whenever any similar act is committed, under similar circumstances, by the Peruvian or any other belligerent Power against a British merchant-vessel on the high seas (a contingency which we think not very likely to happen), Her Majesty's Government will doubtless adhere to the principle upon which they acted in that case.

It does not occur to us to offer any other observations upon these papers except this: that even if the captain of the "Pacific" had proposed voluntarily to do some act contrary to his duty towards the passenger in question, when beyond British jurisdiction, Her Majesty's Government (who, we assume, have no power or control over that vessel or her commander) could not have prevented, and would not be responsible for, it. Any such passenger, whether in the political service of a foreign Government or not, when warned beforehand of any such intention on the part of the captain, must determine for himself what is the proper course to take with a view to his own safety; and certainly he is not entitled to rely upon the direct interference (in the first instance at all events) of Her Majesty's Government. If wronged, he may, of course, seek his proper legal remedies in any Court of any country to which the commander may be responsible.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 4.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 4, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, with its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 91), relative to the circumstances under which the authorities at Bilbao objected to the the burial in the British cemetery at that place of the child of a British subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I find in the 35th section of the Treaty of Madrid (1667) the following provision: "That a decent and convenient burial-place shall be granted and appointed to bury the bodies of the subjects of the King of Great Britain who shall die within the dominions of the King of Spain" (Hertslet, 184). No distinction is here made as to the religion of the British subject who is to be buried. The right belongs to the country, not the religion of the buried.

I presume that this provision is considered to be still in force and binding between the two countries. This child was born of British parents, and "a subject of the King of Great Britain." To have prevented his burial in the British burying-ground would have been a breach of the Treaty obligation, as well as of international comity; to compel, against the wish of his parents, the body to be exhumed and buried elsewhere, was a still greater breach.

It appears to me enough to say this; but I would add, as a collateral observation, that the doctine that baptism by a Spanish priest would affect the right of the parents over the body of their child is on any ground untenable. It is the law of the Roman Catholic, as well as of the Catholic and of the Protestant Church, that baptism administered with water and the proper form of words is valid, by whomsoever administered. "De baptismo ab hœreticis ant infidelibus dato, magna olim disputatio fuit, num valeret: sed eum valere certum est, si tamen id efficere propositum eis fuerit, quod Catholica Ecclesia facit."—(Devoti Inst. Canon, t. 1, p. 395; an ultramontanist writer of high authority.)

The doctrine now contended for would deprive a father of the right to his child's body if it had been erroneously, or contrary to his wish, baptised by a Spanish priest, although the child had been previously duly baptised, and although he had been brought up, lived, and died, in the faith of the English Church.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, by direction of your Lordship, a letter and its inclosures which have been received from the Board of Admiralty relative to the circumstances connected with the capture of the Chilean barque "Alice Ward" by a Spanish gun-boat near Gibraltar, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. Spain exercised lawfully her belligerent right in seizing this vessel in her own territory.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 9, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 4th instant, in regard to the objections raised by the authorities at Bilbao to the burial in the British cemetery of the child of a British subject which had been baptised as a Roman Catholic, he was directed to request that I would inform your Lordship whether supposing that a child born of Protestant parents in England had been baptised by a Roman Catholic priest, its body could be claimed for burial by the Roman Catholic authorities of the parish in which it died, and its burial in a Protestant cemetery be forbidden, and whether such a claim would be allowed in a Court of Law in this country?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if a person who was a minor died, the father or the guardian (subject to the control of the Court of Chancery) would have the power to select the burial-ground in which the body should be interred. If a person who was a major died, his executor or administrator would have the power to direct the place of burial. In neither case would any Roman Catholic authority have any right or power to compel the burial to take place in a Roman Catholic burial-ground by reason that the deceased had been baptised by a Roman Catholic priest.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 11, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury, with its inclosures, relative to two iron-clad vessels now being built in the Thames, and which are supposed to be intended for the Peruvian Government; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship at our earliest convenience as to the mode of proceeding which we would recommend for adoption in regard to these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is no evidence before us at present which would justify the seizure of these vessels. If Mr. Youles' statement be true, one of the vessels, at least, is built on a speculation for sale, and is not ordered by any belligerent Government.

We venture to suggest that it would be well to inquire without delay whether the Spanish Minister is, as Mr. Youles asserts, satisfied as to the destination of the vessel.

With respect to the ship which is being built for Mr. Maylor, there can be no doubt that it is intended, like that being built for Mr. Youles for warlike purposes, and it would seem to be to some extent equipped and armed; and if there were evidence that it was being equipped for a State now at war, it would be seizable under the 7th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, but there is no evidence at present to warrant her seizure. We advise that the men who assert that these vessels are intended for the Peruvian Government should be further questioned, and depositions obtained from them, if possible, and that the vessels should be watched, and any further evidence reported to Her Majesty's Government. We also recommend inquiries to be made on the subject (i. e., as to both ships) of the Peruvian Minister, as was done with good effect in two former cases.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 94), inclosing a copy of a note which he had received from the Spanish Government containing their views in regard to the question of the treatment of the property of neutrals on board enemy's ships, and inclosing to us a former despatch of Sir John Crampton's upon that subject (No. 87), as well as one addressed by Mr. Hammond to him (No. 55), together with a volume of diplomatic documents which were laid before the Spanish Cortes, to which Sir J. Crampton referred in his first-mentioned despatch, and further stating that he was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the correspondence between Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid and the Spanish Minister appears to us to call for no observations upon the international law, which is the subject of that correspondence, in addition to those which we have had the honour to submit to your Lordship in our former Report.

This question appears to us to be now placed upon a satisfactory footing, so far as the Government of Spain is concerned.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (Nos. 104 and 105), together with other correspondence relative to the seizure of a vessel belonging to Gibraltar by a Spanish cruizer; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion whether any, and if so what, further instructions should be sent to Sir J. Crampton with regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That Sir J. Crampton seems to have lost no time in urging the consideration of this important case upon the Spanish Government; but as the seizure of the vessel took place on the 15th January last, it would be proper, I think, that Sir J. Crampton should be again instructed to represent to the Spanish Government the anxiety with which Her Majesty's Government are waiting for a reply to their request that an immediate inquiry be made into what appears, upon the present evidence, to have been a very gross outrage committed by Spanish authorities upon the vessel of one of Her Majesty's subjects upon the high seas, and to remind the Spanish Government that the case has necessarily, from the circumstances, assumed a character of the gravest importance, affecting, as it does, both the national honour of the British flag as well as an injury to the property of a British citizen.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 31, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 15th of March, on the claim made by the owners of the "William Anning" on the Spanish Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a further despatch on the subject from Sir J. Crampton (No. 103), inclosing a detailed account of the losses alleged to have been sustained by the detention of the "William Anning." ? When?

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the former papers, and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the items of the claim thus presented to the Spanish Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this matter, and have the honour to report—

That it is to be regretted that Her Majesty's Consul at Vigo did not accompany the transmission of the detailed statement preferred by Mr. Anning, with the expression of his own opinion as to the propriety of the particular items.

I am bound to say that I think the item for demurrage is the only one which can, in principle, be demanded from the Spanish Government. The loss of the anchors in the hurricane was an accident which might have happened to the vessel anywhere on her voyage, and possibly she was saved from greater danger by being detained in the harbour of the Island of Grand Canary.

With respect to the item founded on a calculation of the probable profit which she might have derived from her second St. Michael's voyage, I think it also too remote and uncertain to be the foundation of a claim of this peculiar kind against the Spanish Government: it is, moreover, to a certain extent, included in the claim for demurrage.

I believe that the usual referees in these cases, namely, two merchants, assisted by some legal person, always act upon the principles which have guided me in this opinion.

The most expedient course, perhaps, now to pursue would be to direct Sir J. Crampton, if the Spanish Government demur to the items, either to withdraw all but the one of demurrage, or to offer to submit these questions of detail to the decision of a Spanish merchant and the British Consul, with power to call in an umpire, if they differ, whose award shall be binding.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 11th ultimo, relative to two vessels which are being built in the Thames, and supposed to be intended for the service of Peru, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further Report from the Treasury, from which it appears that one of the vessels is about to be launched; and he was to request that we would take this letter into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which should be taken in the matter. And Mr. Hammond was to add that the Peruvian Minister at this Court has assured your Lordship that neither of the vessels in question are intended for his Government.

The previous papers were also inclosed for reference, if necessary.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the letter and papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That the statement now made by Mr. Dudgeon that the ship about to be launched by him is not intended for Mr. Youle tends to throw suspicion upon the good faith of the statements previously made by Mr. Dudgeon and Mr. Youle upon the same subject. The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1866.

WE are honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd of June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy and translation of a despatch from the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Spanish Minister in London, in reply to the despatch which, in accordance with our Report of the 21st of March, your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, in regard to the intention of Spain to treat as pirates Chilean privateers under certain conditions; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is apparent that the Spanish Minister is determined to persist in ascribing to certain commentators on this branch of international law a meaning which we think we have conclusively shown to be at variance alike with the general reasoning which pervades their treatises, and with the particular passages, read with their legitimate context, which they contain. It would scarcely appear to us that any advantage can accrue from the continuance of this controversy; more especially as the Spanish Minister is obliged to admit that Martens, the most considerable of writers on this particular subject (and, it may be added, the least inclined to English expositions of international law) maintains, in the clearest terms, the opinion which Her Majesty's Government consider to be correct. But it may be as well to offer the following observations upon the general subject, in addition to those which we have already addressed to your Lordship.

There is a master fallacy which appears to us to pervade the whole contention of the Spanish Minister, namely: That because the Queen of England has, by proclamation, forbidden her subjects to take any part in the war which Spain is now waging against Peru and Chile, England is not entitled to interfere on behalf of any of her subjects if they, being found on board Peruvian or Chilean privateers, are treated as pirates by Spain. But the answer is obvious.

In the first place, the law of Great Britain, with respect to her subjects, is municipal only; and the vindication of that law belongs to Her Majesty and not to any foreign State. In the second place, it does not visit those who transgress it with the penalties of piracy. Thirdly, such persons do not cease to be Her Majesty's subjects, though engaged at a particular time in the service of either belligerent.

The law of Spain, with respect to the character and composition of the crews of privateers, is municipal, and applicable to her own subjects only; but the crime of piracy on the high seas is a matter of international law, the character of which it is not competent to any individual State to vary; and Her Majesty is certainly entitled to protect her subjects from any arbitrary oppression at variance with the principles of the law of nations, though they may have transgressed her command by taking part with either belligerent. She is, therefore, entitled to protect them from the treatment of pirates when they ought to be treated only as prisoners of war.

It is not contended that England or the United States of America have ever allowed this new doctrine, that, without reference to the specific terms of any particular treaty, it is competent to any one State to declare that the fact of a particular number of foreigners being on board a privateer, duly commissioned, shall convert that legitimate vessel of war into a pirate, whom it is the duty of every one if possible to capture and destroy.

It is obvious to observe, among other objections to this novel proposition of international law, that any State might from time to time vary the number, or alter the composition, of the crew, from which (and not from the flag and commission, as hitherto received according to the general maritime law) it is now contended that the character of a vessel on the high seas is to be determined. Such has been the case in former days with respect to France, as we mentioned in our former Reports; and, so far as the subjects of that State were concerned, the Ordinance may have been perfectly legitimate, but it could have no effect upon the subjects of States not owing allegiance to Spain or France in a place like the high seas, where no one State has exclusive jurisdiction.

Lastly, it is of no avail to attack the general character of privateers. It is competent to any State which has not formally renounced the use of privateers to carry on at sea, as in the case of volunteers by land, public war, offensive or defensive, in some degree by the aid and instrumentality of the exertions of its private subjects. No country has more fully recognized this right than Spain; and it might be, that otherwise a newly constituted State, like one of the South American Republics, might be absolutely defenceless against its enemy at sea. But be this as it may, it cannot be denied that the present belligerents are entitled to have recourse to this ancient and recognized means of warfare; and, that being the case, it is no more competent to Spain to declare a duly commissioned privateer to be a pirate, because foreigners constitute a certain portion of her crew, than it would be competent to her to ascribe the same character in the like circumstances to a regular ship of war.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Hong Kong, who forwarded two Proclamations issued by him with regard to Spanish and Chilean cruizers and their prizes calling at that port; and further stating that he was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we considered these Proclamations to be of too stringent a character; and also whether we did not consider that vessels carrying mails should be exempted from their operation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Governor of Hong Kong is right in treating the Spanish vessel of war, though it also carries cargo, as a vessel of war; and, as his Excellency's Proclamations are merely in accordance with Her Majesty's orders issued in this country, to which all Her Majesty's Colonial Governors were bound to give effect (and which contain no exception as to vessels carrying mails), we do not think they can be regarded as of too stringent a character.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received October 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 5, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers relative to the seizure at Cadiz by a Spanish cruizer of the British vessel "Tornado," the property of Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., of London; and was to state that Mr. Campbell had had an interview with your Lordship on the subject, in which he had assured your Lordship that the vessel was totally unarmed, that no arms were sent with her, or were about to follow; that the vessel was, in the first instance, built for the Confederate Government of America, since which the firm of which he is a member bought her, and dispatched her on her present voyage for the purpose of sale, with the expectation that the Brazilian Government might probably be the purchasers; and Mr. Murray was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether, in the present stage of the matter, any steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government beyond those of watching the case; and mentioned that the "Tornado" was the ship to which our Reports of the 6th and 8th of August relate.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that at present, and while a judicial investigation into the merits of this case is pending before the proper Spanish Tribunal, no further steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government beyond those of causing the case to be watched.

We think, also, that a communication should be made to Messrs. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., informing them of the fact of the finding in the engine-room of an agreement with some engineers, &c., for the Chilean Government, and of a bundle of papers which concerned that Government; that John McPherson, the third mate, had denied all knowledge of them or of the Chilean Government, and that he had afterwards acknowledged that he was the chief engineer of that Government; and that these circumstances, as well as the allegation that the arms and stores had preceded the "Tornado," will require attention and explanation on their part in the judicial proceedings at Cadiz. It will be right, also, to send them copies of Captain Collier's letters of the 29th August and 1st September, in which these facts are mentioned.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received October 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 16, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 17th ultimo, respecting the seizure of the "Tornado" by a Spanish cruizer, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Messrs. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., requesting that a formal claim for indemnification for loss may be made on their behalf by Her Majesty's Government. A despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, reporting his conversation with the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs in regard to the course intended to be pursued by the Spanish Government in this matter, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as we are able to judge from the papers submitted to us, we are of opinion that the course which the Spanish Government intends to pursue of submitting the question as to the lawfulness of the capture of this vessel for adjudication to the Admiralty Court, sitting as a Prize Court, is right and proper, and one against which Her Majesty's Government can offer no remonstrance.

If a Spanish vessel had been seized by an English cruizer under the same circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would have considered that they would have made a sufficient answer to any remonstrance from the Spanish Government by stating that the question in dispute was submitted to the judicial investigation of the proper Tribunal.

We think that an answer to this effect should be sent to the letter of Messrs. Campbell and Co, and that they should be apprised that, although Her Majesty's Government will be ready to lend such assistance as may be proper, that they must themselves take, like any other defendants, whatever legal steps are necessary for the protection of their interests in the Spanish Court of Justice, and that any claim for indemnification before the result of the proceedings in that Court is known would be premature.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 1.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, October 30, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th instant respecting the detention of the "Tornado" he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Messrs. Isaac, Campbell and Co., dated the 22nd instant, in answer to a letter, also inclosed, founded on our Report addressed to them on the 19th instant; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would state to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this present letter.

At the same time Mr. Hammond was pleased to transmit, together with the papers which had already been before us, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz, another from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, and an instruction sent to the latter; and further to request that we would consider these papers and report to your Lordship whether, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government can, in the present state of the matter, make any further representations to the Spanish Government, or take any other steps on behalf of the vessel or prisoners, and to what extent Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere in support of the British parties previously to and during the trial. And that your Lordship would also be glad to know whether the proceedings of the Spanish Government, and the inquiry now going on preparatory to the trial of the vessel, and the delay in the commencement of the trial, are so far inconsistent with the practice of this country and of other nations when belligerent as to call for a special remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th October transmitting two further despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid respecting this case (Nos. 244 and 245).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think an answer should be sent to Messrs. Isaac, Campbell and Co. to the following purport and effect: That they appear to have misunderstood the tenor of the communications addressed to them from the Foreign Office upon the subject of the seizure and detention of this vessel.

The Spanish Government justify the seizure of this vessel on the high seas on the ground that she was not in reality the property of a neutral subject, but belonged to the Chilean Government, with whom Spain is at war. The previous history of the vessel, as well as certain papers found on board, seem to furnish some colour for this statement; and here we may remark that Messrs. Isaac, Campbell and Co. are in error when they suppose that the fact of these papers not having been discovered on board at the time of the seizure detracts in any way from the weight of the evidence, whatever that may be, which they afford as to the true character of the vessel.

That the question whether the "Tornado" be a neutral or a belligerent vessel is, according to the principles of international law (always strenuously maintained by this country in former wars) properly cognizable by the Prize Court of the belligerent alone. And that Court is bound in the due exercise of its functions to award costs and damages to the innocent neutral owner, if it shall be proved at the trial that the vessel was really his property. The neutral State is bound to presume that justice will be done by the Prize Court until the contrary shall manifestly appear. The captor, moreover, in this case contends that the captured vessel was intended, with the crew on board of her, for the military service of the State with which he was and is at war. The Spanish Government is, however, certainly not justified in treating with harshness, much less with positive cruelty, the subjects of Her Majesty taken on board this vessel; or, until they have been clearly proved to have been acting as part of the military force of Chile, to consider and treat them as being in the category of prisoners of war. The Spanish Government is entitled to detain them for the purpose of obtaining their evidence, but is bound to keep them, during the time necessary for this purpose, with due attention to all the reasonable wants and requirements of persons in their condition of life.

That Her Majesty's Government has not failed to impress strongly these views upon the Government of Spain; but, as is not unusual in cases of this description, they have been met by contradictory statements as to the facts, and are now endeavouring to discover, through Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid, what is the truth respecting them. We think that such an answer as this should be sent to Messrs. Isaac, Campbell and Co.

With respect to the other questions put to us by your Lordship, we have to observe that it would seem to us to be expedient that the Government of Spain should be most distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government have conceded to the Spanish Government the right to capture, upon the high seas, a vessel, alleged to be a British vessel, and containing a crew composed in most part by Her Majesty's subjects, solely on the ground that it is the right of the belligerent to capture a neutral vessel when he undertakes either that the vessel, when judicially tried before the Prize Court, will be proved to be the vessel of his enemy; or that, in a contrary event, he will restore her with proper costs and damages to the innocent and neutral owner. This Prize Court, it is to be remembered, is an international tribunal, and bound to administer international and not municipal law. It is true that the Prize Court of each country may have its own forms of proceedings; but these forms must not be such as in any way to diminish the full measure of justice to which the neutral is entitled. The belligerent Prize Court, therefore, has no right practically to deny justice by any unnecessary delay in administering it; still less has it any right to adopt, in cases where the jurisdiction is founded exclusively upon international law (the vessel having been seized on the high seas) a mode of procedure, however usual in their municipal courts, which tries the case in the first instance secretly, in the absence and behind the back, as it were, of the accused parties, without their having any opportunity of obtaining proper professional advice and counsel; and though it is said that at a later stage of the proceedings it will be competent to the owners of the owners of the captured vessel to impugn the sentence of this secret tribunal, should it be adverse to them, they ought not to be placed in a condition of having even a primâ facie sentence pronounced against them in the dark, and without any power or opportunity of stating their case. No such course has ever been pursued by the great maritime States of England and America, or, as far as we are aware (whatever may be their practice in criminal cases), by the maritime States of the North or of France, in the cases of prize.

There can be no valid reason why the case should not be heard at once, and in open court; and it must be remembered that in the event either of the vessel being restored, or being condemned by a manifestly unjust sentence, it will be the right and duty of Her Majesty's Government to insist upon the indemnification being proportionate not only to the original wrong done by the seizor, but to the consequential injuries arising out of the delay, expense, and miscarriage of justice incident to so improper a mode of proceeding.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 10.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, November 9, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, received from Her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz, from which we should perceive that Mr. Isaac, of the firm of Isaac, Campbell, and Co., had requested Mr. Dunlop to place the "Tornado" in the list of British vessels arrived at Cadiz, to which request Mr. Dunlop had deferred acceding, until he should receive instructions from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Dunlop.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the "Tornado" having been brought into Cadiz by the Spanish cruizer as a prize of war, we think that it is expedient that the Consul should refrain from placing this vessel on the Consular list of arrivals of British vessels.

It is true that this act could in no way affect the decision of the Prize Court, but it is also true that it could in no legitimate way benefit Mr. Isaac, while it would probably give great offence to the Spanish authorities.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 24.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, November 24, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Richardson and Co, dated the 21st instant, complaining of the proceedings of the Spanish authorities at Barcelona, in the matter of a cargo of saltpetre shipped by Messrs. Richardson on account of a house at Barcelona which appears subsequently to have failed; and Mr. Egerton was to request that I would take this letter, and its inclosures, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the case is one in which Her Majesty's Government can take any, or what, steps.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered the letter, and its inclosures, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that, according to the circumstances stated, Messrs. Richardson had not lost the right which, by the general commercial law and usage, belonged to them, of stopping the delivery of these goods after the bankruptcy of Messrs. Pinto and Co.; they seem to have been unfairly treated, and I think that Her Majesty's Government might properly instruct the Consul at Barcelona to assist, as far as he is able, the application of Messrs. Richardson and Co. for the restoration of these goods, or the payment of the amount of the invoice; but at the same time Messrs. Richardson and Co. must be apprized that they must not rely upon any further interference by Her Majesty's Government on their behalf, the question being, strictly speaking, one of commercial law which it is competent to the Spanish tribunals to decide.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, November 26, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to our previous Reports in regard to the case of the "Tornado," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches, as marked in the margin,[*] relative to the refusal of the Spanish authorities to allow Mr. Dunlop to see Mr. McPherson, one of the crew of that vessel, on the ground of his being a Chilean subject; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Sir John Crampton on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think instructions should be addressed to Sir John Crampton to the following effect: That the proposition of international law maintained by the Spanish authorities with respect to John McPherson, namely, that a person captured on board a belligerent ship of war engaged in the service of that ship may be lawfully treated as an enemy by the captor, is correct; but that it does not necessarily affect the case of McPherson.

The "Tornado," which was primâ facie a British vessel belonging to British subjects, was captured on the high seas while peaceful relations subsisted between Great Britain and Spain, on the ground that she was a Chilean privateer. But the fact of her being so is directly denied by the British owners, and has been for a long period put in issue before the Prize Court; and if it should turn out that the vessel is British, McPherson, whether in the Chilean service or not, could not be lawfully taken out of a British vessel on the high seas, and must be restored to the ship. It is also to be observed that the British owners of the vessel have a perfect right to hold such personal communication with McPherson as is necessary for the defence of their cause, more especially as it appears that McPherson has been already examined on the part of the captors.

We cannot close this Report without again adverting to the opinion expressed in our former Reports that the Spanish authorities have no right to detain and treat the crew of the "Tornado" as prisoners of war unless the "Tornado" was actually in the military service of Chile; and we think that no opportunity should be lost of impressing upon the Spanish Government both that the delay in deciding the case has been already such as to give just cause for grave complaint, and also that Her Majesty's Government will be bound to require, in the event of the vessel being proved innocent, ample compensation for the seizure and detention of the vessel and also for the treatment of her crew.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 6.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th November ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 30th of October last, respecting the case of the "Tornado," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch with its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid upon that subject (No. 272); and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters dated respectively the 30th day of November last (with a further letter from Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co. and its inclosures) and the 1st and 3rd days of December instant, with inclosures on the same subject.[*]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Madrid should be instructed, in reply to the note of General Calonge of the 21st day of November, to say that Her Majesty's Government abstain at present from further discussing the question raised by General Calonge as to the right of captors in cases of prize to institute preliminary secret examinations of the persons on board and others as witnesses, inasmuch as that preliminary examination is now concluded, and ought, if it were right to resort to it at all, to have been concluded long since; but that Her Majesty's Government confining themselves to what is now right to be done in the matter, require either that the legality of the capture of the ship shall immediately be put in course of open trial, with the fullest means of defence to all concerned, in the usual manner, or that the ship and crew be immediately released with adequate compensation, and that Her Majesty's Minister should be requested to ascertain, as precisely as may be possible, and to forward forthwith to Her Majesty's Government, the present state of proceedings in the Prize Court, and whether any, and what, steps have actually been taken for the public and open trial of the questions at issue.

[†] Consul Dunlop, No. 60; Sir J. Crampton, Nos. 269, 274, and 275.

We think also that Her Majesty's Minister should be instructed to repeat that while admitting the right of the Spanish Prize Courts to deal with the prize in the manner and subject to the limitations mentioned in former despatches, Her Majesty's Government deny the right of the Spanish Government to detain British subjects as prisoners of war merely because they were on board the vessel at the time of capture, even if the trial proceeds; and that as it appears clear that the crew generally (possibly with one or two exceptions) were neither Chilean subjects, nor engaged in the Chilean service, the utmost right of the Spanish Government as against them must be to detain them without imprisonment so as to insure that their evidence shall be forthcoming when necessary: and Her Majesty's Minister should, we think, urge that those of the crew who are in this position should be at once released from everything like imprisonment, and (though kept under such surveillance as may be necessary for securing their evidence at the proper time) should, according to their respective stations in life, receive such allowances and accommodation as are due to the subjects of a friendly Power.

It should further, we think, be an instruction to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, that Her Majesty's Government again protest against the doctrine that if the "Tornado" shall prove to be a British vessel the Spanish Government have any right for one moment to detain any person found on board her, even though such person be a Chilean subject or an officer in the Chilean service. In the event supposed, the vessel with her crew and passengers, whatever their nationality or character, must be restored, and full compensation made for the wrong done by the detention.

It may also be right to urge that the only question is what was the nationality and character of the ship at the time of capture.* The intentions and conduct of her owners at any former time can only be of importance as bearing on the question of the true character and nationality of the ship at the time of the capture.

We think that Messrs. Isaac and Co. should be informed that, as your Lordship is advised that the Prize Court has jurisdiction in the matter of the "Tornado," all that Her Majesty's Government can properly do, is to urge the speedy trial of the case, to insist upon full means of defence being afforded the owners of the "Tornado," upon her crew not being treated as prisoners of war, and to intimate that if it should turn out that she has been unjustly seized, due compensation must be awarded to her owners; and that all this has been already done by Her Majesty's Government.

They should also be informed that they are under a mistake when they conceive that the belligerent has no right to inquire into the previous history of the vessel which he has seized, or that the simple fact of the transfer of her ownership to these gentlemen prevents the Spanish Prize Court from ascertaining the real character of her destination, and whether the enemy has, or has not, any remaining interest in her. The arguments alleged by these gentlemen in their letters are proper to be urged by their agents before the Prize Court in Spain.

Addendum.

By the above expression, "bearing upon her nationality at the time of the capture," we may add that the evidence of the vessel having, since the breaking out of war, been the property of the Chilean Government as a ship of war, or having since that time been employed as, or built for the purpose of being employed as, a privateer in the service of the Chilean Government, might justify the Prize Court in disregarding any change of ownership, and of holding her nationality at the time of capture not to be changed thereby.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th December instant, in which he stated that, with reference to his letter of the 3rd instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for any observations we might have to offer thereupon, the accompanying further despatches which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid relating to the "Tornado" case (Nos. 288 and 289).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to us to make any observations on the further despatches now laid before us, in addition to those which we have already had the honour to offer in a former Report on this case.

The principles of international law which ought to govern this case are not controverted in the letter or despatch of General Rubalcava to General Calonge, and the Spanish authorities seem alive to the necessity of a prompt application of the principles for which we have contended.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received April 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from Mr. J. G. Roch, dated the 16th ultimo, containing a protest against his being called upon for military service in Switzerland, as a Genevese. A Report which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister in Switzerland, transmitting a copy of his correspondence with the Federal Government upon this subject, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to Mr. Roch's liability under the circumstances in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I understand the grandfather of Mr. Roch to have been by birth a Genevese subject, having been born in a territory ceded by Sardinia to Geneva in 1816 by a Treaty, one of the conditions of which was, that those so born should, being Christians, be considered as Genevese. That by the law of this Canton the national character is inalienable, and extends to the grandchild, who, in this case, lives and is domiciled at Geneva. The matter seems to have been judiciously and successfully treated by Admiral Harris. I do not think that the claim to exemption from military service can be put—the English law on the same subject being duly borne in mind—upon the high ground of strict right. The claim has been, and should be, preferred upon the lower ground of usage and convenience.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 8.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, May 8, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 14th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Sir R. Peel, urging a reconsideration of the case of Mr. J. G. Roch, who protests against being called upon for military service in Switzerland as a Genevese. The former papers were transmitted for my consideration; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what reply should be returned to Sir R. Peel's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the case of Mr. Roch is singular in its circumstances; but as it is admitted that the grandfather of Mr. Roch was, by operation of the Treaty, a Genevese citizen to all intents and purposes, the real question is this: Has the Geneva Government a right to enforce a law, which it has enacted long ago, that the grandchildren of Genevese citizens shall be treated, in Geneva, as also being Genevese citizens? It is difficult to say that England can deny this right to Geneva, inasmuch as England treats the grandchild, who himself, and whose father, is born out of the country as a natural-born subject if the grandfather was a natural-born subject. It is very true that in this case the father was of age, though the grandson, Mr. Roch, was a minor when the grandfather was a Genevese citizen, and that Mr. Roch has been at various times treated by the Genevese Government as an Englishman; and, therefore, it is a very strong case for remonstrance, as I have had the honour to report, on the ground of convenience, usage, and comity: but it is not a case which can be judiciously placed upon the footing of strict right. The Genevese Government cannot on this ground be denied the power to enforce this law in its own territory. On referring to Admiral Harris' despatch (No. 31, April 2) I see that he fully expects that his remonstrance will prevail.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, May 21, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 8th instant on the subject of the claim of Mr. Roch to exemption from military service in Geneva, the substance of which has been communicated to Sir Robert Peel, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter from Sir Robert Peel, adverting to what he considers to have been a point misinterpreted in this case, and bearing upon the question whether Mr. Roch's grandfather or father can be held to have been Swiss citizens under the operation of the Treaty of 1816; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Sir Robert Peel's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it must be remembered that the question in this case is, whether the British Government has a right to insist that a Genevese law, as to the national character of a grandchild of a Genevese citizen, shall not be enforced in Geneva.

With respect to the effect of the Treaty: The recognition of the grandfather as a Genevese citizen may have been formally made in 1833; but it was by reason and in virtue of the Treaty of Cession of 1816, the natural effect of which was to render the subjects of the ceded territory citizens of the State to which the cession was made.

With respect to the previous treatment of Mr. Roch as a British subject by the Genevese authority, I can only repeat that it constitutes a good ground for remonstrance, which there seems little reason to doubt will be successful, against his being now compelled to discharge the military duties of a Genevese subject.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 29th of December last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, for such observations as I may have to offer thereupon, the accompanying despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis (No. 7), containing the further particulars respecting the course he had adopted in regard to the Maltese family who had been conpelled by distress to embrace the Mahometan religion.

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, December 12, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis setting forth the circumstances under which a sequester has been placed upon a Tunisian ship of war in the port of Malta by some creditors of the Bey; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, my opinion on the points raised by Mr. Wood, and as to the instructions which it would be right and proper to give him for his future guidance.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Consul-General should be apprized that the exercise of civil jurisdiction at the instance of a private individual over a vessel of war belonging to a friendly State in any port or harbour of Her Majesty's dominions ought not to be allowed. It is true that this point has never been formally decided, though it has been raised in an English Court.—(Case of the "Prinz Frederick," 1 Phill. Com. International Law, p. 370.)

In my opinion the principles of international and public law, applicable to this question, are most correctly laid down by Mr. Justice Story, delivering the judgment of the Supreme Tribunal of the United States in the case of the "Santissima Trinidad:"—

"It stands upon principles of public comity and convenience, and arises from the presumed consent or licence of nations, that foreign public ships coming into their ports and demeaning themselves according to law, and in a friendly manner, shall be exempt from the local jurisdiction. But as such consent and licence is implied only from the general usage of nations, it may be withdrawn upon notice at any time without just offence; and if, afterwards, such public ships come into our ports, they are amenable to our laws in the same manner as other vessels."—(1 Phill. Com. International Law, p. 368.)

It becomes,t herefore, unnecessary to answer relatively to this case, the second question propounded by the Consul-General; and as the case is urgent, I send my Report in to-night.

No. 209.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 12.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, January 12, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (Nos. 6 and 7) respecting the abuses which have been discovered to be practised upon the British Post Office at Constantinople, in sending articles through it which would be properly liable to Custom duties in Turkey. That I should perceive from Lord Lyons' despatch No. 7, that in the case of Mr. Blogg, the fraud was discovered by the Turkish authorities, and that he has been fined double the amount of the duty payable on his goods, for his evasion of the Customs regulations. That Mr. Blogg has applied to Her Majesty's Government for their intervention on his behalf; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not the circumstances of the case justify Her Majesty's Government in affording any, and what, support to Mr. Blogg.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere on behalf of Mr. Blogg. He appears to me to have been very lightly punished for attempting to perpetrate a plain fraud upon the Turkish Custom-house, as to the circumstances of which he has made a very disingenuous statement.

With respect to the general question of similar frauds effected through the medium of sending jewels in registered letters through the British Post Office in the Ottoman dominions, it appears to me clearly the duty of Her Majesty's Government to take some measures for the repression of this abuse. The concession of a separate Post Office to Great Britain is a very large and liberal concession of comity, and ought to be enjoyed with a scrupulous regard to the legitimate object for which it was made.

The proposal made by the Turkish authorities does not seem likely to be effective, and it is open, perhaps, to other objections. Some arrangement might be made, I should think, through the Department of the Postmaster-General, which might put a check upon these frauds.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 19.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 19, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th January instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 11th May, 1864, and the 26th January, 1865, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 61) reporting the views entertained by some of his colleagues in regard to the question of Consular jurisdiction in Tripoli, and the difficulty of arriving at any other common resolution among the Representatives of the Christian Powers than that of maintaining the jurisdiction claimed by Her Majesty's Consul-General in Tripoli; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with the former ones connected with this question,* and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the further steps which should now be taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if this question is to be considered as purely one of the legal construction of the Capitulations it must, as we have before reported, be decided against the pretensions of the British Consul, and in favour of the claim made by the Ottoman authorities.

Two material facts, in support of the opposite view, are alleged in these papers:

1. That the usage (of which, however, no satisfactory proof that we can see has yet been offered) has always been in accordance with the British pretension.

2. That a similar pretension has always been, and still is, maintained by other European States.

It still appears to us that there ought, if possible, to be a joint action of the Christian Powers who have Treaties with the Porte on this subject; and that Her Majesty is, at all events, entitled to claim for the British Consul at Tripoli as large a jurisdiction, with respect to offences alleged to have been committed there by British subjects, as may be conceded by the Porte to the Consuls of other Powers with respect to their subjects,

But we are unable to make any practical suggestions as to this matter, in addition to those which we have already had the honour to offer to your Lordship in our former Reports.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received February 14.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February , 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 9), reporting the circumstances under which Mr. W. F. Johnston a British subject, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for an assault on a Turkish soldier, and the grounds on which Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad has declined to give Mr. Johnston up to the Turkish authorities in order that he might undergo the sentence pronounced against him; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the general subject of the Capitulations between Great Britain and the Ottoman Empire we have had the honour to make several Reports, the general tenor of which may be said to be that these Capitulations, in their plain and natural sense, are binding upon Great Britain; but that if other Christian States have been, and are now, permitted to substitute a usage derogating in some degree from the obligation of these Capitulations, Great Britain ought not to be placed by the Ottoman authorities in a worse condition than these States.

In the present case we agree with Mr. Logie that the 42nd Article of the Capitulations has not been complied with, and, therefore, that the Turkish authorities cannot claim, as a matter of right, the delivering up of Mr. Johnston.

It is very difficult to arrive, upon the evidence before us, at the truth of the story; but we think that Mr. Johnston was much to blame, and that he did, though under considerable provocation, assault the soldier in a manner which cannot be justified.

The punishment, regard especially being had to the character of the prison, appears to us excessive.

The proposition of Colonel Kemball (Her Majesty's Consul) that Johnston should undergo imprisonment for one month in the Consular premises would be an arrangement of this affair, which, if practicable, it might be expedient to effect: but if the Turkish Government are not satisfied with this, we think it is clear that he ought not to be given up as demanded; the trial, in the absence of the British Consul, and the decision without his concurrence, being, under the Capitulations, a mere nullity.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 28th February, 1866, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Aleppo (No. 9), inclosing a Petition from Mr. A. T. Coleman (dated the 13th ultimo), representing the assignees of the bankrupt firm, Laniado, Abadi and Co.; and to request that we would take this paper into our consideration, in conjunction with the papers transmitted to us in his letter above-mentioned.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration. and have the honour to report—

That it appears that, whether the suit be prosecuted in the Court at Aleppo or at Trieste, the Austrian Consul cannot be proceeded against, without the consent of the Austrian Government.

That, as there is primâ facie evidence that the Austrian Consul was acting as partner in this firm during the period when a large portion of the debts were contracted, it seems to us proper that the petition of Mr. Coleman, with the annexed documents, should be communicated by your Lordship to the Austrian Government, with a request that the proper steps may be allowed to be taken for rendering the Austrian Consul amenable to both or one of the tribunals at Aleppo and Trieste.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th April ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 99), setting forth the circumstances under which Mr. Cesare Raffaelli, who claims British protection in Turkey, has applied for the support of Her Majesty's Embassy, in regard to questions which have arisen between him and the Porte with reference to a steam saw-mill at Ada Bazar; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not bound to interfere at all in this matter between Mr. Raffaelli and the Turkish Government, and we humbly advise that they should abstain from doing so.

With respect to the claim of this person for British protection, we think (apart from the consideration of his nationality) that inasmuch as British protection has been accorded to him and his ancestors for a long series of years, and as it is recognized by his Highness Aali Pasha (letter of 17th December, 1864, Inclosure 9 in No. 99), and by the Firman granted to Mr. Raffaelli, it should be continued to him.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 14, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 112), applying for instructions with regard to the claim of M. Scarlato M. Mavrogadato to British protection, and also with regard to a claim preferred by this person against the Egyptian Government, under the circumstances set forth in the correspondence, of which copies were inclosed in Lord Lyons' despatch; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to M. Mavrogadato's claim to British protection, we do not think that, in strictness, any foreigner who is merely naturalized in Great Britain has a title to British protection abroad, though we think the good offices of Her Majesty's Representatives may, as a general rule, be properly extended to such persons elsewhere than in the dominions of the State to which they owe natural allegiance. Substituting, therefore, the term "good offices" for the term "protection," we agree with the opinion expressed in the letter of Mr. Logie to Count Pisani (Inclosure No. 9 in Lord Lyons' No. 112), that such claim as this gentleman may have to British good offices in the Ottoman dominions must be "subject to the determination of any question which may be raised by the Turkish Government arising out of his place of birth; and that if that question is raised, M. Mavrogadato must be prepared to establish, to his Excellency's satisfaction, that he forms one of a class of persons over whom the Porte has renounced its right of regarding them as its subjects, notwithstanding their birth in its territory."

With respect to the claim preferred by M. Mavrogadato against the Egyptian Government, while we think it is a matter by no means free from doubt whether in the circumstances of this military revolt the Egyptian Government are responsible at all for damages which foreigners, in common with native subjects, may have sustained, we are clearly of opinion that Colonel Stanton (see letter of Lord Lyons, Inclosure No. 8 in No. 112) is correct in his view, that the Egyptian Government can, at the most, only be held liable for the actual value on the spot of the articles destroyed; and that no support should be given by Her Majesty's Representative to any other claim whatever upon the Egyptian Government in this case. As to the claim itself for the actual loss, we think it may not improperly be recommended to the favourable consideration of that Government. We do not, however, advise that, if resisted, it should be pressed as a matter of right.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 16, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* respecting an application which has been made by Captain Dingwall for the interference of Her Majesty's Government with regard to claims against certain inhabitants of Tarsus, brought forward by his agent or partner, Mr. Abdo Debbas.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he had inclosed a despatch from Sir H. Bulwer, relative to a somewhat similar case, which formed the subject of the Law Officers' Report of the 26th August, 1859, together with the draft of the instruction which was addressed to Sir H. Bulwer in reply.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the previous day, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further letter from Captain Dingwall, respecting the case of Abdo Debbas; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on this case at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the principle of the Report of our predecessors in office, dated August 26, 1859, upon the subject of claims of partnerships formed in Turkey between British and Turkish subjects to receive British protection. The principle of that Report is applicable to Captain Dingwall's case so far as relates to the partnership transactions of himself and Abdo Debbas.

We also agree in all respects with the advice tendered by Her Majesty's Judge and Consul-General Logie to Lord Lyons (Inclosure 10 in Lord Lyons' No. 3; No. 39, Judicial, April 14, 1866).

We think that Her Majesty's Government ought not to grant any exceptional protection to the firm of Mr. Dingwall and Mr. Abdo Debbas, of Tarsus, the latter being a subject of the Porte in Tarsus; and that the obtaining the Vizirial letter for Mr. Debbas, and following it up in the manner indicated by the instructions given to Mr. Skene, was all that could properly be done in this case by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Colonel Stanton acted properly in giving his consent, in common with the other Consuls, to these Police Regulations, which appear to have become necessary for the maintenance of public order in Egypt, and not to violate the provisions of the Capitulations or Treaties now existing between Great Britain and the Porte.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 6, 1866.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 19th ultimo, which has been received from Mr. Fernandes, in reply to a letter (of which the draft was annexed), which was addressed to him on the 18th ultimo, founded upon our Report of the 12th ultimo, on the subject of his claim against the Porte, in consequence of the authorities at Durazzo preventing him from carrying out a contract he had entered into for cutting and exporting timber from a forest in that neighbourhood; and to request we would take Mr. Fernandes' letter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the former papers relating to this case were annexed for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that an answer to the following effect should be sent to Mr. Fernandes:—That Her Majesty's Government have again considered his request that they would exert official influence to procure a rehearing of his case before the Turkish authorities; and that they find no sufficient grounds for altering the determination which they have already expressed.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 7, 1866.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports of November 24, 1864, and February 7, 1865, relative to the expediency of Her Majesty's Consular Officers in the Levant adhering strictly to the letter of the Capitulations, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt (Consular, No. 11, February 12, 1866), requesting instructions as to the manner in which certain questions should be decided by Her Majesty's Consular Officers in Egypt with reference to Treaty obligations, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the instructions which Colonel Stanton has issued to Her Majesty's

Legal Vice-Consul are proper with respect to both the classes of cases referred to him by that officer. With respect to the first, British subjects are entitled to insist upon the established usage being put in force by the local authorities. With respect to the second, British subjects are bound by the terms of the Treaty of the 21st February, 1856, which we think is rightly interpreted by Colonel Stantou.

If, indeed, after it was known that British subjects complied with the terms of this Treaty, and submitted to the imposts in question, the subjects of other States, to whom the provisions of the Treaty equally apply, were permitted systematically to enjoy an exemption from these imposts, the question would assume a different shape, and would then require reconsideration.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter, dated the 24th ultimo, from Mr. C. H. Davis, suggesting, with reference to the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, under which Bishops may be appointed to places out of Her Majesty's dominions, certain alterations which he alleges to be necessary in the Colonial Bishops Bill, now before the House of Commons; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

Copies of the Bill and Act of Parliament were also inclosed, as well as a Memorandum drawn up in the Foreign Office, January 28, 1859, upon the subject of the establishment of a Bishopric at Jerusalem.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the Colonial Bishops Bill was prepared under the sanction and advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, and that I do not think the observations of Mr. Davis with respect to what he conceives may be the possible bearing of this measure upon the Jerusalem Bishops Bill (5 Vict., cap. 6) are of sufficient weight to induce your Lordship to require any alteration in this measure; though, otherwise, the suggestion of adding the Statute 5 & 6 Vict., cap. 6, to the Schedule of Statutes proposed to be abrogated by this Bill would be worthy of consideration.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received August 29.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, August 29, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a representation, dated the 21st instant, from Messrs. Coventry, Sheppard, and Co., and other merchants interested in the corn trade, complaining of the effects of an order issued by the Moldo-Wallachian Government, prohibiting the exportation of maize, barley, and millet.

A despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest, setting forth the grounds on which this order has been given, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would have a right to demand that contracts for grain by British merchants with traders in the Principalities, previously to the issue of the order, shall be exempted from its operation, and that grain thus already contracted for, shall be allowed to be exported. And if not, what course Her Majesty's Government would, in my opinion be justified in taking in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a Treaty of Commerce, such as that between Her Majesty and the Sultan (signed at Kanlidja, 29th April, 1861), does not prevent one of the Contracting States from prohibiting, in time of famine, the exportation of native produce necessary for the sustenance of the people, is a proposition of international law which may be said to be well established by the reason of the thing, and by the usage of States (Vattel, L. 2, c 12, s. 179). Such a dearth appears, according to the letter of Mr. Consul Green (Bucharest, 13th August, No. 24), actually to exist in these Principalities, so far as the cereals, maize, barley, and millet, are concerned; upon the first of which crops the food of the people is said mainly to depend.

Assuming this to be the true state of the case, I am of opinion that it was competent to the Government of these Principalities to prohibit, during the continuance of this dearth, the exportation of these cereals. I am further of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot be advised to claim, as a matter of right, that contracts for these cereals made by British merchants with traders in the Principalities, previously to the issue of the order, shall be exempted from its operation, and that grain, thus already contracted for, shall be allowed to be exported. But if the Memorandum from the Foreign Office, which accompanies these papers, correctly states that there exists, in the Ottoman Dominions, a "Réglement Organique" requiring a certain notice to be given several months beforehand of such prohibitions, I think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in representing to the proper authorities in these Principalities that, with respect to grain already purchased and as to which the contract has been completed by British merchants, previously to the issue of this prohibition, if such grain be not exempted from the operation of the order, a claim for proper compensation for the injury thereby inflicted on the British trader will be founded; of which it will be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to require satisfaction from the Government of the Principalities. The existence of the "Réglement Organique" referred to, places the demand for compensation upon a vantage ground, but even if none such existed it would not be competent to a State to make a law injuriously affecting, by retrospective operation, the foreign trader (who had a right to rely upon the provisions of the existing commercial Treaty) without incurring an obligation to compensation for the damage thus inflicted.

Upon the whole I humbly advise that Mr. Green be instructed to represent to the proper authorities the opinion of Her Majesty's Government in the sense and spirit of the observations which I have now the honour to offer; and it would perhaps be expedient that reference should be made to the precedent of the effectual remonstrance of Sir J. Canning in 1846; for foreign States have, I conceive, still the right to treat these Principalities as, de jure, subject to whatever international obligations are binding on the Ottoman Government.

In compliance with your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think that this claim ought not to be supported by Her Majesty's Government without further and better information respecting it, and we humbly recommend that Lord Lyons, to whom it is said the claim has been submitted, be requested to give his opiniom; and also that Her Majesty's Consul-General at Alexandria be desired to report to your Lordship thereupon.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received October 6.)

Doctors' Commons, October 3, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to my report of the 21st of June, 1865, respecting the claim of Mr. de Mattos to receive from the Turkish Government interest on the amount due to him by that Government for coals supplied to the Ottoman Artillery Department, but which were not paid for at the time specified in the contract entered into between him and the Porte; he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, the accompanying further correspondence which has passed on the subject, and to request that I would take the same into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which should now be taken with regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as I understand the present position of this case, it is as follows:—Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople has been instructed to press upon the Turkish Government the payment of the principnl sum of money due to Mr. de Mattos, with an interest of 7 per cent.; that this demand has not been rejected by the Turkish Government, but Mr. de Mattos conceives himself to be entitled to interest at the rate of 12 per cent., and demurs to the proposed settlement of his claim.

The agent of Mr. de Mattos refers to various legal authorities for the purpose of establishing two positions:—(1). That interest is due in the circumstances, though no mention is made of it in the contract. (2). That the interest should be at the rate of 12 per cent., such being the current interest at Constantinople. With respect to the former position, I have already advised Her Majesty's Government in accordance with it.

With respect to the second, I am by no means certain that it is legally correct, even if an action for breach of contract were brought in a Court of Justice; but, even assuming the correctness of it, I am clearly of opinion that it does not necessarily furnish the measure of a demand, preferred through the medium of Diplomatic Agency, to the Turkish Government.

It is quite competent to Her Majesty's Government to take into consideration many circumstances by which a Court of strict law could not be guided. It has, in fact, a discretion to exercise with reference to the condition of the Turkish Government as well as other matters; and I think that this discretion has been wisely exercised by Her Majesty's Representative at Constantinople in the more moderate demand for interest than he (Mr. de Mattos) has though proper to make.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn; December 7, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that we might have noticed in the newspapers an account of a person named Surratt, alleged to have been concerned in the assassination of President Lincoln, having been traced by American agents in several parts of Italy, and from thence to Malta, and finally to Egypt; and Mr. Hammond inclosed the newspapers to which he referred, and was directed also to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul in Egypt, asking instructions with reference to the possible contingency of Surratt claiming to be protected in Egypt as a British subject against a demand made on the Egyptian authorities by the Consul of the United States for his delivery up for trial in the United States; and as the matter is very urgent, Mr. Hammond was to request that we would consider, and report to your Lordship with as little delay as possible, what instructions should be sent to Mr. Francis, and which, to save time, would be sent by telegraph.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That instructions to the following effect should be sent to Her Majesty's Consul.

1. That, primâ facie, this person must be treated as a foreigner, not entitled to British protection.

2. That his own assertion, or oath, must not be considered as sufficient proof that he is a British subject, otherwise the exclusive Consular jurisdiction of the Ottoman dominions would become an asylum for fugitive criminals of all nations.

3. That if he produces proper proof, by documents or otherwise, of his British nationality, the Consul must refer the matter to Her Majesty's Government for further instructions (as in this event a question of Consular jurisdiction will arise, and the Treaty of Extradition with the United States would not be applicable to the case).

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 22.)

Doctors' Commons, December 22, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying note which has been received from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court, requesting that orders may be given for the prevention of the embarkation from British ports of contraband of war for Turkish territory. A letter from the Treasury, to which Department Musurus Bey's note was immediately referred, as well as a copy of the Treaty of 1861 between Her Majesty and the Sultan, to which allusion is made, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That M. Musurus should be apprised that Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake to prevent the exportation of contraband articles, and that the seizure at Liverpool has not been made upon the ground that the articles were contraband, but on the ground that the exporter attempted to defraud the Custom-house.

That the Treaty of Kanlidja (April 29, 1861), provides by the XVIIIth Article for the seizure of contraband goods by the Ottoman Treasury, and the XVth Article provides "That the Sublime Porte may issue a general prohibition against the importation into the Ottoman dominions of gunpowder, cannon, arms of war, or military stores, but such prohibition will not come into operation until it shall have been officially notified, and will only apply to the articles mentioned in the Decree enacting the prohibition." The same Article of the Treaty contains special conditions under which gunpowder is allowed to be imported.

It will of course, therefore, be competent to the Ottoman authorities to take such measures as may seem to them expedient in order to prevent the importation of contraband into the Ottoman dominions. I assume that it is not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to issue a Proclamation putting in force the 150th section of the 16 and 17 Vic., cap. 107, and thereby prohibiting the exportation of arms, ammunition, gunpowder, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 6.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 6, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce, and its inclosures,† respecting a claim preferred against the United States' Government by Mr. Heyworth, on account of cotton seized at Augusta; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that neither of the grounds alleged for the confiscation of this property is legally valid. This cotton appears to have been purchased as an investment by neutral merchants with the intention of transporting it to England as soon as the war should be at an end. No attempt to break the blockade by exporting the cotton before this event had happened is proved or even alleged. The law applicable to the mutual rights of belligerents and neutrals, in case of blockade, rests upon well established principles, recognized both by England and by the United States. By that law vessels attempting to break a blockade by ingress or egress from the port, are, with or without their cargo (according to the circumstances) liable to seizure and confiscation. This is the utmost extent to which international law permits the belligerent to exercise dominion over the property of a neutral.

The cotton in this case represents certain sums of money which neutral merchants sent or in some manner paid for its purchase, but which has not been captured (assuming for the sake of argument that it might have been captured) on board any vessel either going in or out of a blockade port. It could not, therefore, have been lawfully seized, even flagrante bello, on the ground of any breach of the blockade. Then, as to the other ground, namely, the assistance which it is said the belligerent derived from the money which purchased the cotton, the answer is, that the neutral had a right to trade with both belligerents, and that the advantage which either might have derived from that trade cannot enure to the injury of the neutral: and this cotton is seized (it is always to be remembered) not as the property of the enemy, a ground of seizure which would have given rise to very different considerations, but as the property of the neutral.

No. 228.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 9.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 9, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of December, 1865, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 22nd of that month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further note and its inclosures, from Mr. Adams, dated the 28th ultimo, respecting the case of the "Shenandoah;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the inclosures in Mr. Adams' letter contain the first evidence which has been submitted to Her Majesty's Government bearing on the alleged piracy of Captain Waddell, and on the alleged breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act on the part of persons forming part of the crew of the "Shenandoah" when she arrived at Liverpool.

With respect to the charge of piracy: Temple certainly states that, on some day of June last, Captain Waddell was told by the captain and crew of a vessel which he had captured that General Lee had surrendered, and that the war was over. It does not appear that this statement of the captain and crew (if actually heard by Temple) was at the time confirmed by anything written or printed, such as newspapers, letters, &c.; and the truth of Temple's statement may be greatly doubted, from the entire silence of the protest of the master of the "William C. Nye," stated by Temple to have been afterwards captured (a copy of which protest was sent by Mr. Adams to Lord Russell on the 21st October last) upon the same point. Captain Waddell continued to make prize after this; but after the receipt of the next information (the date of which is not given further than that it was before the 6th of July) Temple does not assert that any further prizes were made. The next date which he gives is the 2nd of August, when Captain Waddell made further inquiries of the "Barracouta," an English vessel; and upon receiving from her confirmation of the intelligence, determined to sail to England.

We do not think that, upon this evidence, there would be such a reasonable probability of obtaining a conviction on the charge of piracy as to warrant a prosecution. Temple's statement as to the first communication of the cessation of the war to Captain Waddell would probably be contradicted by witnesses on Captain Waddell's behalf: but, even if it were uncontradicted, the jury might well doubt whether Captain Waddell really believed the information of what he must have regarded as highly improbable until it was subsequently confirmed; and if he did not believe it, the mens rea necessary to his conviction would not be established.

With respect to the nationality of some of the crew of the "Shenandoah," we think that the statements of Temple (although he does not show what means he has of knowing that any of the persons described as British subjects in his list are natural-born subjects of Her Majesty) are such as to make further inquiries necessary; endeavours should be made to ascertain the present residence or whereabouts of those whom he describes to be British subjects, and to ascertain what further proof can be obtained on this subject. Mrs. Marshall cannot give evidence against her husband; but other evidence against him may possibly be obtained. On the whole, we advise that prosecutions for offences against the 2nd section of the Foreign Enlistment Act should be instituted against any British subjects against whom Temple's evidence can be confirmed by reliable testimony; and if no such testimony can be obtained against other persons, it will deserve consideration whether, upon his own admissions, a prosecution should or should not be instituted against Temple himself.

With respect to that part of Mr. Adams' letter which refers to two 18-pounder guns being mounted on the deck of the "Shenandoah" when she left England, we have to observe that, if this were true, it would be immaterial, inasmuch as Mr. Adams does not assert that either he or Her Majesty's Government had information of it; and, further, that the total silence of all the witnesses in the case of Regina v. Corbett (who had been examined by the American Consul), on the subject of these guns, throws some doubt (to say the least) on this part of Temple's story. Independently of which it is clear that the general armament and equipment of the "Shenandoah" with the necessary munitions of war was provided by the "Laurel;" and there is nothing to render it probable that, without such equipment, and in the state in which she left this country, the "Shenandoah" (even if she carried the two guns alleged) was in the condition of an armed vessel capable of committing hostilities against the United States.

Among other statements in the depositions of Temple which appear to us to require notice are some relating to the conduct of the Governor and officers of the Government at Melbourne, in Victoria, who are said to have paid to Captain Waddell and his officers attentions of a very marked and public kind, which (from persons in such situations) would appear to us to have been highly unsuitable and inconsistent with a due respect for Her Majesty's neutrality. We doubt extremely the truth of these statements, especially as they go much beyond anything which we find alleged by the United States' Consul at Melbourne in the papers sent by Mr. Adams to Lord Russell on the 21st October last. But, nevertheless, we think that it might be proper to bring these allegations to the attention of Sir C. Darling and his Government, and to ask for some explanations with reference thereto.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 9, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Mr. Seward dated the 30th November ultimo (which had been communicated to your Lordship by Mr. Adams), in which the United States' Secretary of State protests against the course pursued by Her Majesty's Government in reference to the "Shenandoah," her officers and crew, on the arrival of that vessel at Liverpool; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon, and more particularly with reference to the proofs stated to have been furnished to Her Majesty's Government of the guilty practices of the "Shenandoah," and the statements as to the nationality of her crew.

The previous papers were sent for reference if required.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, inclosing to us a printed copy of the bound MSS. correspondence which was forwarded to us on the 22nd ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is impossible for us to avoid expressing our surprise and regret at the tone and style which throughout characterize Mr. Seward's despatch of the 30th of November last. It imputes, in plain terms to Her Majesty's Government, a determination to disregard "applications for justice" made by the United States' Government, and an intention to shelter from the punishment due to their offence, persons known to be guilty of piracy.

It is for Her Majesty's Government to determine in what manner the sense which we presume your Lordship must entertain of such imputations should be made known to the Government of the United States.

With respect to the proofs stated to have been furnished to Her Majesty's Government of the alleged guilty practices of the "Shenandoah," and the statements as to the nationality of her crew, we beg to offer the following observations:—

Mr. Seward in his despatch, while dwelling only upon the crime of piracy which he assumes to have been committed by the commander and crew of the "Shenandoah," says, that the alleged offenders, when under the power of Her Majesty's Government, obtained their "discharge and unconditional enlargement" upon two grounds: 1st. That Her Majesty's Government had in their possession no evidence "to impeach a prevaricating plea of the Commander;" and, 2ndly. That none of those persons were subjects of Great Britain; "whereas," he says, "upon evidence, which seems to this Government entirely conclusive, all the offenders were either native subjects of the Queen, or had become by some sufficient form of refuge or domiciliation, amenable, equally with native subjects, to the penal laws of the realm."

Mr. Seward cannot be ignorant that Her Majesty's Government have never alleged the fact that none of these persons were shown to be subjects of Great Britain, as a reason for not prosecuting them for piracy. Foreigners guilty of piracy are as much amenable to the tribunals of this country as natural-born subjects. It was only with reference to a very different question (namely, whether any charge could be made under the "Foreign Enlistment Act"), that the nationality of these persons was, or was ever alleged to be, material. That question, of course, depended upon the words of the particular statute under which the enlistment abroad, or on the high seas, of persons who had become by any "form of refuge or domiciliation," or otherwise, amenable to British laws while in this country, would not be an offence unless they were "natural-born subjects of Her Majesty."

Mr. Seward does not commit himself to the assertion that Her Majesty's Government were in possession of evidence to show that any of those persons who formed the crew of the "Shenandoah" when she arrived at Liverpool were natural-born British subjects; and, as a matter of fact, it is certain that Her Majesty's Government were not in possession of any such evidence, nor could such a fact be presumed, in the absence of evidence, against individuals coming to Liverpool on board a Confederate ship-of-war, and not shown to have enlisted within Her Majesty's dominions.

We return to the first ground (the only material one as to the charge of piracy) upon which Her Majesty's Government is (and so far truly) said to have acted. Whether Captain Waddell's statement was, or was not, open to the charge of prevarication brought against it by Mr. Seward, it was not in the power of Her Majesty's Government to detain any of those men without laying an information against them before a Magistrate in the ordinary course of law, and supporting it by at least some primâ facie evidence. The simple fact is that there was no such evidence. But Mr. Seward says: (1) That "every part of the unlawful transaction complained of had occurred either in British ports or on the decks of the 'Shenandoah,' herself a British vessel;" (2) "that all these transactions had been fully made known to Her Majesty's Government;" and (3), "that any parties who could give the necessary testimony for the conviction of the pirates were not only within British jurisdiction, but actually within custody of agents of Her Majesty's Government."

Each of these propositions must be separately examined. The first seems to us to imply that Mr. Seward's charge of piracy against the "Shenandoah" is not founded upon the alleged continuance of hostilities by Captain Waddell after he had received notice of the termination of the war, but that he designates as piracy all the captures made by that vessel during the whole course of the war, and endeavours to support that pretension by the allegation that she was throughout "a British vessel." To this it is enough to say that such a contention is opposed, either to universally acknowledged principles of law, or to notorious and indisputable facts. To universally acknowledged principles of law, if Mr. Seward means to contend that the Commander and crew of a vessel, commissioned as a public ship of war by a Revolutionary Government, which has been recognized as a belligerent Power by neutral nations, can be charged with piracy in a neutral country merely for capturing and destroying the ships of the other belligerent. To notorious and indisputable facts, if he means to deny that the "Sea King" was transferred and delivered by her former British owners and commander to agents of the Confederate States (by whom she was purchased in order that she might be employed and commissioned by and in the service of those States), or that she was actually so employed and commissioned as a public ship of war, under the name of the "Shenandoah," from a period antecedent to her first capture, down to the close of the war. It cannot be too distinctly understood that no charge of piracy could possibly be preferred or entertained against this vessel under these circumstances by Her Majesty's Government, or in the Courts of this country, unless it had been satisfactorily shown that this ship wilfully continued to seize and destroy United States' vessels after she was apprized of the termination of the war. But there is a further answer to this pretence, that the "Shenandoah" is to be regarded as having been, while making war upon the United States, "a British vessel." When she arrived at Liverpool, Mr. Adams (7th November, 1865) requested Her Majesty's Government to take possession of her "with a view to deliver her into the hands of his [the United States'] Government," taking notice at the same of the "belligerent character," which "in the eyes of Her Majesty's Government" she had possessed, though suggesting that there might be grounds for taking criminal proceedings against the persons on board, either because "her ravages appeared to have been continued," after her claim to a belligerent character had, at all events, ceased, or because several of those persons were "British subjects."

Her Majesty's Government having received from Captain Waddell the possession of this ship (surrendered by him expressly for the reasons alleged in his letter of the 6th November, 1865, namely, that "as all the property of Government had reverted by the fortune of war to the Government of the United States of North America, therefore this vessel, inasmuch as it was the property of the Confederate States, should accompany the other property already reverted), complied with Mr. Adams' request, and delivered up the ship to the agents of the United States' Government, at the same time sending Mr. Adams a copy of Captain Waddell's letter. Mr. Adams in a letter dated 14th November, 1865, stated that the Consul of the United States at Liverpool had taken charge of the vessel under his instructions, and added (what has unfortunately not been verified by the event) that he "entertained no doubt that the promptness of this proceeding would give great satisfaction to his Government."

It is hardly necessary for us to point out to your Lordship that Mr. Adams' request for the delivery of this ship to the United States' Government could neither have been made nor complied with, except upon the ground that she was, in the circumstances which had happened, the lawful property of that Government. If she had been British-owned (as Mr. Seward now affects to represent), the Government of the United States could have had no possible claim or title to her, even though she might have been guilty of piracy, nor could the Crown of Great Britain have acquired any title to or disposing power over her, by means of any surrender of Captain Waddell in the port of Liverpool, or by any other means short of a regular forfeiture and condemnation by process of law.

To Mr. Adams, when he made the request, all this was, of course, perfectly well known; and he also knew (if not otherwise, at all events from the proceedings before Vice-Chancellor Wood in the case of the "United States v. Prideaux," taken by his own direction), that the Government and Courts of this country must necessarily recognize his Government as entitled to the property in this vessel, on the ground stated by Captain Waddell, namely, that she had been acquired, and was possessed, as public property, by the persons who, during the war, had exercised the powers of government in the Confederate States: a ground which (we may add) was also distinctly recognized by the Judge of the United States' Prize Court in the recent case of the "Wren."

We think Her Majesty's Government were at the time entitled to assume (and we know they did assume) that this request was made upon this ground, upon which alone it could be supported; and, after having so obtained the delivery of the vessel, it certainly does not seem to us to be consistent for the Government of the United States to deny that she was a public ship of war, belonging to and commissioned by the Revolutionary Government of the Confederate States.

We have dwelt so much upon this point because it seems to be that upon which Mr. Seward really relies.

We now proceed to examine his second statement, namely, "that all the transactions" (supposed to make out a case of piracy against the "Shenandoah") "had been" (before the crew were released at Liverpool) "fully made known to Her Majesty's Government."

This confirms us in our impression, that Mr. Seward does not mean to rely upon the allegation that the "Shenandoah" continued her ravages after she was apprized of the termination of the war. For the fact is, that the only particulars with respect to any capture or captures made by the "Shenandoah," at any date or dates subsequent to the termination of the war, which had even before that time been communicated to Her Majesty's Government, either by Mr. Adams, or in any other manner, were those relating to the capture of the "William C. Nye" on the 26th of June, 1865, the documents with respect to which were forwarded with Mr. Adams' letter to Earl Russell of the 21st of October last.

Those documents, however, which included the protest of the master of the "William C. Nye" (made at San Francisco on the 7th August last), are absolutely silent as to any notice or knowledge of the termination of the war, either by the captors, or by the master or crew of the "William C. Nye," or by any of the persons met by them on board the "Shenandoah," who had belonged to the crews of vessels previously captured.

This seems to us to be very strong negative evidence that the restoration of peace was not in fact known at the time when, and in the seas where, this capture took place. But whether that be so or not, these documents certainly did not put Her Majesty's Government in possession of any evidence showing, or tending to show, that the crime of piracy had been committed.

There remains only Mr. Seward's third statement, that "any parties who could give the necessary testimony for the conviction of the pirates were not only within British jurisdiction, but virtually within the custody of agents of Her Majesty's Government."

As Mr. Seward has not explained to what persons he here refers, we can only say that the existence of persons able to give such testimony was not then known or indicated to Her Majesty's Government; and if it was then known to the Minister, or any other agent of the United States in this country, it was not communicated by them to Her Majesty's Government. If Mr. Seward means that some of the persons forming the crew of the "Shenandoah" could themselves have given available evidence for this purpose, it is hardly necessary to observe that no such evidence was offered or known to be available; and that it is not consistent with our usual method of administering justice to endeavour to extract from persons suspected, even on probable grounds, of crime, admissions capable of being used against themselves.

We have no further comments to offer upon this remarkable despatch, except to repeat (what we have formerly stated) that if the agents of the United States in this country, or any other persons, were in possession of evidence on which a charge of piracy against the officers and crew of the "Shenandoah" could have been supported before a Magistrate, it was competent for them to have themselves preferred such a charge, and to have obtained a conviction thereon in due course of law.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 10, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 2nd instant, from Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe preferring a claim against the Government of the United States on account of the destruction of cotton, belonging to the late Mr. Kay, at Camden in South Carolina: and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. The Memorandum which has been prepared respecting this claim, together with the papers in the case of Messrs. Aitkin and Rogers therein referred to, was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think this case falls within the principle of the opinion which we expressed in our Report on the case of Messrs. Aitken and Rogers. Indeed, if the present claim be at all distinguished from this case, it is distinguished unfavourably for the claimant, inasmuch as the cotton was, in this case, purchased and stored by a resident American agent for the British owner.

We do not, therefore, advise your Lordship to forward, as requested by Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe, this case for the consideration of the American Government. The owners may, of course, make any representation on their own behalf which it might be competent for a natural born subject of the United States to make under similar circumstances.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,[*] a letter from the Colonial Office, and its inclosures,[†] respecting the case of the "Georgiana," a vessel which has been claimed by the United States' Government from the Government of Canada as having belonged to the Government of the so-called Confederate States: and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the "Georgiana" cannot, at present, be given up by the Government of Canada. Litigation, involving the question of title to her ownership, is now pending before the Civil Tribunals of Canada. The Government of the United States has itself obtained an injunction from the Canadian Court of Chancery against the alleged owner. The issue of this suit certainly, and, probably, also the hearing of the rule in the Canadian Court of Queen's Bench, must be waited for before any decision of the Executive can be taken in this matter.

In the meantime, it is to be observed that the claim of the United States' Government to this vessel, on the ground that she belonged to the late Confederate Government, carries with it the admission of a previous state of public war, and confirms some of the observations which we had the honour to offer to your Lordship in our last Report on the case of the "Shenandoah."

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th January instant, stating, that with reference to our Report of the 25th July, 1863, on the case of Mr. J. McAlister Vernon, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from that gentleman, dated the 20th December, 1865, urging his claims against the Government of the United States on account of his imprisonment and loss of property; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous papers were also inclosed for reference, if required.[*]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion expressed in our Report of the 25th of July, 1863.

We think that the advice given by his Excellency Sir F. Bruce to Mr. Vernon was judicious and right; and we are clearly of opinion, for the reasons set forth in our former Report, that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere in this case.

That it now appears that the "St. Mary's" did not, as a matter of fact, remain, at the period referred to by Mr. Adams, abandoned by her captors in Annotto Bay; and that, if the vessel had been so abandoned, she would have been taken possession of by the British authorities "in order" (to cite the words of the Jamaica Government Secretary's letter July 5, 1865,) "to prevent unseemly conflict of finders, unless the American Consul first takes possession." The position, therefore, of Mr. Adams turns out to be wholly unfounded, and we repeat our opinion that Governor Eyre is not to blame in any way with respect to this vessel.

Lincoln's Inn, February 3, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston (No. 11, January 5), and its inclosures, respecting cotton purchased for British subjects by agents in the so-styled Confederate States during the late civil war.

And Mr. Hammond was to request we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The previous papers relating to the case of Mr. Heyworth were also inclosed.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not find any new facts stated in these papers which at all effect the Report which we have already had the honour to make upon the general subject of the seizure of cotton belonging to British subjects, purchased from Confederate owners.

In our opinion the seizure of this cotton now is an act scarcely justifiable; the confiscation of it would be an act wholly unwarrantable by any principles of jurisprudence, private or public, with which we are acquainted.

To treat the dealings of foreigners with persons in the Confederate States as bound by the Acts of Congress of the United States during the time while the de facto Government of the Confederate States continued, would be a most questionable course of proceeding; but to hold bonâ fide transactions of this kind, which take place in 1862 and 1863, defeated ex post facto by an Act of Congress passed in 1864, would be nothing less than monstrous.

The circumstances as stated appear to place the case of Messrs. Gibbs on a most favourable footing; but we do not advise that Her Majesty's Government should at present intervene exceptionally on behalf of any individual British purchaser of this cotton. We think that the strongest official remonstrance as to the whole of this class of cases should be pressed upon the United States' Government.

Messrs. Gibbs' case, and its circumstances, may (of course) be referred to, as illustrating the nature of the injustice complained of.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, dated the 7th instant, requesting instructions as to the course which he is to pursue in case of his being called upon by the Captain of a United States' vessel of war to assist in the recovery of deserters, together with copies of a correspondence which has passed between the Colonial Office and Board of Trade upon the subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the Governor of the Bahamas has no legal authority to assist the Captain of a United States' ship of war in the recovery of deserters from his ship. Such an authority could only be derived from the provisions of a Statute. It is clear that the Imperial Statute 15 and 16 Vic., cap. 26, is confined to merchant vessels, and I understand that the Local Bahamas Act, passed in 1833 (which I have not before me), does not confer upon him any such power.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these representations into our consideration, as well as the draft instruction to Sir F. Watt, Treasurer to the Board of Trade at Montreal, complaining of some of the provisions of this Bill; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there is any objection to the Act in question with regard to its bearing on the Reciprocity Treaty, which was inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have considered the Canadian Statute referred to, and the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States.

By the Treaty, "all fisheries in rivers, and in the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen." I am not certain to what distance from the shore the unceded fishings and fisheries in Canada extend. The Treaty gives the liberty to the inhabitants of the United States to take, in certain waters, the particular kind of fish specified, in common with the subjects of Her Majesty.

If the licences and leases to private persons contemplated by the Canadian Statute include waters in which by the Treaty the inhabitants of the United States have a right to fish, it is clear that either the licence or lease must be construed so as not to exclude the United States' subjects, though it excludes British subjects; or that the Statute has impaired the international obligations of the Treaty. I think that this position should be clearly put before the Canadian authorities, and that your Lordship's opinion should be reserved till an explanation is received on both points, namely, as to whether the licence or lease is granted with the understanding that it does not exclude United States' inhabitants, and whether they do or do not include the waters mentioned in the Treaty.

I have, &c,

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st February instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 10th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Cairns and Co., dated the 19th instant (which had been forwarded to the Foreign Office by Sir E. Colebrooke) relative to their cotton at Camden in South Carolina, which was destroyed by the United States' authorities, and to request that we would take this case into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Hammond dated the 22nd February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Messrs. Brown and Sharp, dated 21st instant, and its inclosures, respecting the destruction of cotton at Camden, South Carolina; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, in connection with the other papers relating to the same subject which were forwarded to us on the 21st instant, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused the papers referred to us, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that these two cases are not distinguishable in principle from other cases in which we have advised your Lordship, that the property having been destroyed in the course of belligerent operations there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 6, 1866.

My Lord,

THAT the answer of the Lord Lieutenant to the United States' Consul, contained in Major-General Larcom's letter of the 28th ultimo, appears to us to be proper and correct.

It is impossible that Her Majesty's Government should recognize any title in any foreign Power to interfere on behalf of natural born subjects of Her Majesty whom it may be thought necessary to detain in custody in Ireland on the ground that such natural born subjects have become by naturalisation or otherwise entitled to rights of citizenship in a foreign country.

If any controversy is raised in these or in any other cases upon the question whether the persons in custody are, in fact, natural born subjects of Her Majesty, it will be right to receive and to pay due attention to any representations which may be made on that subject by the Minister or Consul of the nation whose citizens they are represented to be, and to inquire into the truth of such representations and of any evidence which may be offered in support of them.

If it should appear that any persons who are so in custody are not, in fact, natural born subjects of the Queen, it will be right to pay prompt attention to all representations tending to exonerate them from suspicion and to justify their release, which may be offered to Her Majesty's Government, and to give upon each such case, in which it may not be deemed proper to release them, such explanations to the Minister or Consul interceding on their behalf as may show that their liberty has not been interfered with, except upon such necessary or reasonable grounds as are deemed by Her Majesty's Government to be sufficient under the present circumstances of Ireland to justify their detention.

The course which we recommend to be followed upon these points is the same which was uniformly followed by the Government of the United States under similar circumstances during the recent war in that country.

No. 243.

The Attorney-General to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 6, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note from Mr. Adams, containing observations with regard to what I said in the House of Commons on the 23rd February, in reply to Mr. Labouchere's statement as to what passed between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States on the subject of proposed amendments in the Foreign Enlistment Acts of the two countries, and to request that I would favour your Lordship with such observations as I might have to offer in reply to Mr. Adams' note.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That after a careful reconsideration of the expressions used by me on the occasion to which Mr. Adams refers, and of the documents cited in his letter to your Lordship, I am unable to perceive that there was in the substance of my observations anything which, when rightly understood, can be open to the charge either of misstating material facts or of placing a wrong construction upon the conduct of the Government of the United States. It must be borne in mind that my object was not at all to criticise or reflect upon the conduct of that Government, for which I have always entertained a most high and sincere respect, but solely to explain under what circumstances Her Majesty's Government had determined, during the late war, to put to proof the efficiency or inefficiency of our own foreign Enlistment Act, without attempting to propose any alteration of it to Parliament.

1. With respect to the exact date at which the overture to which I referred was made by Her Majesty's Government, my memory (for I spoke from memory) was certainly not quite accurate; and, on that point, I willingly accept Mr. Adams' correction. But I must be permitted to add that the circumstance of that overture having been made after, and not before, the commencement of the discussions with respect to the "Alabama," would (if it had been present to my mind) have enabled me to give additional point to some of my observations as to the manner in which that overture was met by the Government of the United States.

2. Mr. Adams appears to think that the facts did not warrant me in representing this overture as having been made by Her Majesty's Government "spontaneously, of its own volition;" the letter of Earl Russell, dated the 19th December, 1862, in which it was contained, having been written in answer to one from Mr. Adams himself, in which, (after seeking redress for the captures made by the "Alabama") he solicited from Her Majesty's Government "a more effective prevention of any repetition of such lawless and injurious proceedings in Her Majesty's ports." No doubt, it was with a view to this latter object, mutually desired by both Governments, that Earl Russell, in reply, suggested the consideration of the question whether amendments might not advantageously be made in the Foreign Enlistment Acts of both countries. That suggestion, however, though made upon such an occasion, did not the less originate with Her Majesty's Government, and was not the less entirely spontaneous on their part. Mr. Adams had, on one or two former occasions, intimated that new legislation by Great Britain against blockade-running, and against the exportation of munitions of war from this country to the Confederate States, might have been acceptable to the Government of the United States; but I am not aware that he had ever, down to that time, suggested any alteration of our Foreign Enlistment Act, as necessary for the more efficient prevention of naval equipments for warlike purposes; and the sequel of the correspondence itself clearly proves that the Government of the United States did not look upon their own Act of Congress of 1818 as requiring any such alteration.

I see no reason, therefore, to recede at all from the substance of that part of my statement in which Mr. Adams understands me to have affirmed "that the British Government spontaneously, of its own volition, initiated a proposition to the Government of the United States to revise the Foreign Enlistment Acts of both countries, and make such additions as might be thought necessary to them."

3. But with respect to the remaining and more important point, I cannot altogether admit the correctness of Mr Adams' interpretation of my language. He understands it to have been substantially affirmed by me, "That the answer of the United States to this offer was like throwing cold water on it altogether. They said they had no objection to enter into the consideration of such a question, but they were satisfied with their own law as it stood," So far, Mr Adams quite fairly represents the effect of my statement; and the documents cited by himself (as well as Earl Russell's despatch to Lord Lyons on the same subject, to which he does not refer) prove the fact to have been as I stated it, whether I rightly described such an answer as cold and discouraging or not. Mr. Adams, indeed, quotes a letter from Mr. Seward to himself, dated the 19th January, 1863, and says, that he "abstains from entering into any discussion of whether the language of that letter is or is not fairly to be considered as throwing cold water altogether" on Earl Russell's proposition. But he does not state that the terms of that letter of Mr. Seward were ever communicated to Her Majesty's Government; nor can I find the least trace of such a communication having been made in any of the sources of information open to me. I do not, therefore, perceive how the language of Mr. Seward in a letter to Mr. Adams can legitimately be called in aid to alter or modify the impression which Mr. Adams' own conversation with Earl Russell may have been in itself calculated to produce.

Mr. Adams proceeds to say that it was "clearly implied in the sequel" (of my observations), "though not affirmed in words, that, as a consequence of this answer, the British Government were reluctantly compelled to desist from appealing to Parliament at all." And then, after citing passages from the documents which passed between himself and the Government of Washington, ending with his own despatch, which contains a record of the conversation between himself and Earl Russell, he assumes it to have been shown, "that his Lordship's answer, declining to proceed any further, was made forthwith, and was the result of Cabinet deliberations previously held, and of the opinion of the Lord Chancellor theretofore given. It was," he adds, "in no way the effect of the communication made by myself at the moment, but had been prepared in advance to meet it whenever it came, or whatever it might be. It fell in with an opinion expressed by Mr. Seward, but was in no manner dependent upon it. If this be the correct chronology, it follows that no such hypothetical difficulty in an appeal to Parliament, after such an answer, as is described by Her Majesty's Attorney-General, could ever have been possible. Her Majesty's Government had decided before the answer ever appeared, not to make any such appeal, but rather to abide by the Lord Chancellor's confidence in the existing Statute."

I cannot think it is a just inference from anything which I said that Her Majesty's Government were "reluctantly compelled" to desist from making any application to Parliament "as a consequence" of Mr. Adams' answer to Earl Russell's suggestion. I neither said nor implied that Her Majesty's Government were desirous of making any such application to Parliament; much less that the answer returned by the United States' Government to Earl Russell's overture, was their only or their principal reason for not making it. On the contrary, the manifest difficulty of carrying such a measure through Parliament at such a time, and the great inconvenience of any unsuccessful attempt to do so (to which I did not omit to refer) would necessarily make the conclusion that such an attempt was unnecessary (if it could be arrived at on good grounds) acceptable to Her Majesty's Government; and the opinion formed in the Cabinet, under the advice of the Lord Chancellor (which I also mentioned in the debate), that our existing law would probably be found upon trial sufficient for its purpose, must (of course) have contributed in a very important degree to that conclusion. But as I read the reports of this conversation (both that made by Mr. Adams and that of Earl Russell to Lord Lyons), I find nothing in either of them to justify Mr. Adams' inference, that Her Majesty's Government had determined beforehand to let the matter drop at all events, and not to propose any measure to Parliament whatever the answer of the Government of the United States might be.

Lord Russell did, indeed, at once come to the conclusion, which he then announced to Mr. Adams, that the matter could not at that time usefully be carried further. But why? Not because the Cabinet had already so decided, but because the opinion of the Government of the United States, as expressed by Mr. Adams, as to their own law, was found to coincide with the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, expressed in the Cabinet, as to our law. Under these circumstances there appeared to be an agreement of opinion between the Governments of both countries, that reliance might safely be placed upon their existing laws; and, if any measure had been afterwards proposed to Parliament, the opinions thus formed and expressed must, when made known, have had an unfavourable influence upon its chance of success. To prosecute the negotiation further under such circumstances, might not improbably have proved a source of serious embarrassment to Her Majesty's Government, unless some amendments of the laws of both countries had actually resulted from it; and the prospect of such a result was too uncertain to justify the risk.

The Government of the United States had thought it necessary, while expressing their willingness to consider any propositions which might emanate from Her Majesty's Government, to guard themselves against being supposed to admit that their own law (in the language of Mr. Adams) was not "of very sufficient vigour," or (in the language of Earl Russell) that it "could be improved." They were willing to receive suggestions, but though invited to do so, they themselves made none. What might have been the effect of this if Her Majesty's Government had been satisfied that an amendment of our Foreign Enlistment Act was indispensable for the accomplishment of its objects, I cannot pretend to say; but under the actual circumstances of the case, its natural (not to say necessary) effect was the reply immediately given by Earl Russell to Mr. Adams; in which reply the Government of the United States, without any appearance of surprise or dissatisfaction, acquiesced.

Mr. Adams thinks himself warranted in concluding that, if the answer of the Government of the United States had been different, the reply of Earl Russell would still have been the same. My conclusion, from the facts and the documents was and is the reverse. Having voluntarily proposed to enter into communication, with a view to the mutual revision of the Statutes of both countries on a very important and very practical subject, it was fully open to his Lordship to withdraw from that proposal when the Government of the United States had expressed their willingness to entertain it in a merely passive sense, without accepting any part of the responsibility of pressing it forward, or even encouraging it so far as to say that they concurred in the views with which it had been originally proposed, or that they anticipated any prospect of advantage from its further prosecution. Under these circumstances the Lord Chancellor's opinion that there was no practical necessity for a change in our law, became decisive. But my belief is that the Cabinet had, in fact, come to no conclusion which would have superseded the further consideration of the question at that time, if the United States' Government had stated it to be the result of their experience that their own law required amendments to make it perfectly efficient; much less if they had expressed an anxiety to agree in such amendments as might make the laws of both countries more effective for their common purpose, and had offered, or stated themselves to be prepared to offer any practical suggestions with that view. Nor does it apper to me at all probable that, if such had been the tenor of the answer given by Mr. Adams to Earl Russell's proposal, his Lordship would have, nevertheless, broken off a negotiation initiated by himself, merely because the Lord Chancellor had in the meantime induced the Cabinet to take a more favourable view than that which had been entertained by Her Majesty's Law Officers of our existing law.

I think, therefore, that I did not err in my appreciation of the substance of what took place between the two Governments; and although I do not attribute, and never have attributed, the decision of Her Majesty's Government solely to the opinion expressed by the Government of the United States as to the sufficiency of their own law, I still continue to believe (what alone I meant to state or imply in my place in Parliament), that the opinion so expressed by the Government of the United States did exercise a material influence upon the course then and subsequently taken by Her Majesty's Government, and that it would have been also likely to prove a serious impediment to the success of any measure for the amendment of the Foreign Enlistment Act, if such a measure (even after some continued negotiation with the Government of the United States) had been introduced into Parliament.

I have, &c.

P.S.—I annex, as necessary to give a complete view of what passed, the two following extracts; No. 1 being the passage in Earl Russell's letter to Mr. Adams of December 19, 1862, immediately following that quoted by Mr. Adams; and the other, No. 2, being Earl Russell's report to Lord Lyons, dated February 14, 1863, of his conversation with Mr. Adams.

No. 1.

"I shall accordingly be ready to confer at any time with you, and to listen to any suggestions which you may have to make, by which the British Foreign Enlistment Act, and the corresponding Statute of the United States, may be made more efficient for their purpose."

No. 2.

Mr. Adams said, "That his Government were ready to listen to any propositions Her Majesty's Government had to make; but they did not see how their own law on this subject could be improved." I said, "that the Cabinet had come to a similar conclusion, so that no further proceedings need be taken at present on this subject."

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 9, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 7th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us three letters from the Home Office,* inclosing copies of correspondence between the United States' Consul at Dublin and the Irish Government, relative to the arrest, on suspicion of being implicated in the Fenian movement, of persons claiming to be citizens; and at the same time to state to us that, in an interview with your Lordship on the previous day, Mr. Adams claimed a right to interfere on behalf of all persons arrested who can prove American citizenship. Mr. Adams did not go so far as to demand their release on that account, but that the United States' Consul at Dublin should be informed of the cause of their imprisonment, and be allowed to see the depositions against them.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this subject into our consideration, and that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to how far this claim should be complied with:—1st, with respect to American born citizens; and 2ndly, as to British born subjects who have been naturalized in the United States. And also to inclose, as likely to be useful to us, a Memorandum showing what passed between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States with regard to the arrest of British subjects in the United States at the time of the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in that country, and the correspondence between Mr. Bancroft and Viscount Palmerston respecting arrests in Ireland in 1848; and to refer us, with regard to this correspondence, to the Law Officers' Report of the 7th of August, 1849.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the same date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to Mr. Murray's letter of the same date, a volume of United States' executive documents containing the correspondence laid before Congress in regard to American citizens imprisoned in Ireland in 1848.

We are also further honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Home Office dated the 7th instant, inclosing copies of further correspondence between the United States' Consul at Dublin and the Irish Government, relative to the arrest of persons claiming to be American citizens, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers now before us, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answers of the Lord-Lieutenant to the United States' Consul, contained in Major-General Larcom's letters of the 28th ultimo and the 3rd instant, appear to us to be proper and correct.

It is impossible that Her Majesty's Government should recognize any title in any foreign Power to interfere on behalf of natural born subjects of Her Majesty whom it may be thought necessary to detain in custody in Ireland, on the ground that such natural-born subjects have become, by naturalization or otherwise, entitled to rights of citizenship in a foreign country. On this point it is sufficient to say, that we entirely adhere to the views expressed in the Report of the Law Officers of the 7th of August, 1849.

If any controversy is raised in any particular case upon the question, whether the persons in custody are in fact natural born subjects of Her Majesty, it will be right to receive and to pay due attention to any representations which may be made on that subject by the Minister or Consul of the nation whose citizens they are represented to be, and to inquire into the truth of such representations, and of any evidence which may be offered in support of them.

If it should appear that any persons who are so in custody are not, in fact, natural-born subjects of the Queen, it will be right to state (in answer to any proper inquiry) the cause of their detention, and to pay prompt attention to all representations tending to exonerate them from suspicion, and to justify their release, which may be offered to Her Majesty's Government; and also to give, as to each such case in which it may not be deemed proper to release them, such further explanations to the Minister or Consul interceding on their behalf, as may show that their liberty has not been interfered with except upon necessary or reasonable grounds, deemed by Her Majesty's Government, under the present circumstances of Ireland, to be sufficient to justify their detention. It will be for the Lord-Lieutenant in each particular case, to judge how far it may be consistent with the public interest to allow the foreign Consul to see the depositions (if any) which may have been taken against such persons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have again considered this matter, and have the honour to further report—

That I have now perused the Bahamas Acts of 1833 and 1865. The former is less carefully worded than the latter, which purports to be a continuing Act, and contains the word "merchant." The Attorney-General to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 21.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 21, 1866.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th March instant, stating that your Lordship had transmitted to Mr. Adams a copy of the statement which I made to your Lordship in answer to the representation from Mr. Adams touching what I said in the House of Commons with reference to proposals for amending the Foreign Enlistment Acts of this country and the United States; and that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a letter which has been received from Mr. Adams, dated 12th instant, in reply, for any observations which I might desire to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Adams' letter of the 12th instant call for little further observation on my part.

If Mr. Adams understood me "substantially to affirm" the two propositions embodied in this letter, all I can say is that he misunderstood me. I stated (as is the truth), that Her Majesty's Government "voluntarily initiated a proposition" to the United States' Government, not "to amend the provisions of the British Foreign Enlistment Law for the benefit of the United States," but, that the Foreign Enlistment Acts of both countries should be revised, with a view to their simultaneous amendment, if, after mutual communication, such amendments should appear to the two Governments to be practicable and desirable.

I further stated the answer which was, in fact, given by the United States' Government to that overture, describing it (and I think truly) as one which did not encourage Her Majesty's Government to proceed further in the matter, and as one which, if the matter had been carried further, might have been used in Parliament as an argument against the existence of any necessity for the alteration of our law. But I did not, either directly or "substantially" affirm that "Her Majesty's Government had been deterred from prosecuting this friendly proposal entirely by the cold and repulsive manner in which that proposition had been met by the United States."

I disclaim wholly the inference which Mr. Adams considers to follow from the propositions which he attributes to me, viz., that "the whole responsibility for any failure of Her Majesty's Government in securing from Parliament greater safeguards against the abuse of neutrality in this kingdom devolves on the United States." Nothing could possibly be further from my mind than the idea that the United States ought to be held responsible for the decision of Her Majesty's Government to abide by and enforce the existing law of this country. It is one thing to attribute (as I think I was fully justified in attributing) considerable practical importance to the opinion expressed by the Government of the United States at that juncture that their own law was "very sufficient" for its intended purpose; and another thing to say or imply, that because such was the opinion of the United States, Her Majesty's Government were not solely and exclusively responsible for forming and acting upon a similar opinion as to the law of this country.

The only other statements in Mr. Adams' letter which seem to me to require any remark, are those in which he insists that the only thing done by Her Majesty's Government was "a suggestion of an intention to make a proposal," and that "that intention was definitively abandoned before any reply from the United States came to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government." I am surprised that Mr. Adams, who speaks so much in this letter of facts (as opposed to reasoning), should again have overlooked the fact (proved by the passage of Earl Russell's letter of the 19th December, 1862, which was extracted in the appendix to my former remarks), that Her Majesty's Government did not merely "suggest an intention to make a proposal," but expressly invited suggestions from the Government of the United States, which they failed to obtain. Upon the other question, whether the intention conveyed by Earl Russell's letter had been "definitively abandoned" before the answer of the United States' Government was received, Mr. Adams (unless he has some private information not discoverable from the contemporaneous documents, and which has never been communicated to me), seems simply to confound two things materially different: viz. (1), an opinion derived at by the Cabinet, under the advice of the Lord Chancellor, that reliance might be placed on the sufficiency of our Foreign Enlistment Act for its intended purpose; and (2), a definitive resolution not to follow up the overture contained in Earl Russell's letter of the 19th December, 1862. I do not find, in the documents to which I have access that any such resolution had been taken, in or out of the Cabinet, before Earl Russell learnt from Mr. Adams that the United States' Government did not consider their own Foreign Enlistment Act to require, or indeed to be susceptible of, any improvement.

Lincoln's Inn, March 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th March instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th ultimo, respecting the case of the "Shenandoah," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a further correspondence between the Foreign Office and the Home Office,† respecting the possibility of obtaining evidence against the officers and crew of that vessel, and also with regard to the trustworthiness of Temple's testimony; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That in our former Reports we sufficiently intimated our opinion of the untrustworthy character of Temple's evidence; and as so long a period has passed by without any confirmation being obtained of those parts of his statement which tended to show that offences triable by the laws of this country might have been committed by persons on board the "Shenandoah," and as the correspondence with the Home Office leads to the conclusion that none such is likely to be obtained, we are of opinion that so far as any further inquiries at Liverpool are concerned, the matter may now properly be allowed to drop.

The proposal of Temple to give wilfully false evidence in the case of Captain Corbett would alone be sufficient to render his statement entirely unworthy of credit: and many other circumstances (some of which are apparent on the face of his deposition itself) tend to show its untruth. Into these, however, we do not think it necessary now to enter; but it is satisfactory to find that Captain Waddell's statement, that no captures were made by the "Shenandoah" after the news of the termination of the war reached those

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a letter from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston (No. 3), now on leave of absence in this country, requesting to be informed what course should be pursued with reference to payment of a debt due to the heirs of the late Mr. David Cameron, British subject, which payment is proposed to be made in the depreciated currency of the United States; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the general question as to the effect upon debts due to foreigners of a subsequent alteration of the currency, in which a legal tender may be made, by the Legislature of the country where such debts are payable, involves considerations as to which jurists of eminence have holden different opinions. But we do not think it necessary in this case to express our own opinion on that general question; because we are of opinion that, in a question arising out of a contract for the sale of land in a foreign country, Her Majesty's Government cannot properly interfere; and that the vendors, though British subjects, must have recourse to the law of the country in which the land is situated, and must be considered, with respect to it, as entitled only to the same administration of justice as native subjects.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th of March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 27th ultimo, from Messrs. Duck, Brothers, and Co., of Liverpool, stating that they are sufferers by the pillage of Bagdad, Mexico, by United States' subjects, and that the goods were taken to the American side of the Rio Grande, and their agent's endeavours to recover the same were unsuccessful; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to add that Messrs. Duck, Brothers, and Co., are consequently desirous of knowing if they are to look to the United States' Government for redress and indemnification, and, if so, whether their claim can be forwarded to that Government through Her Majesty's Minister at Washington: and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Messrs. Duck Brothers' letter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

The further papers, as marked in the margin,* touching the general question of the pillage of Bagdad were annexed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise that an answer be sent to Messrs. Duck and Co. to the effect: that they must address any claim which they may have to make in consequence of their losses

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 23rd of February last, relative to the Act lately passed by the Canadian Legislature for the better regulation of fisheries, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 25th instant, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Canada, together with a copy of a Report from the Commissioner of Crown Lands on the subject of the above-mentioned Act; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether after the explanations now received as to the bearing of the proposed Act on the stipulations of the Reciprocity Treaty, there is any further objection to its confirmation by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th March last, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th of September last respecting Mrs. Molyneux's claim against the United States' Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, as marked in the margin,* comprising the correspondence which has since passed on this case; and he was more particularly to call our attention to the estimate of Mrs. Molyneux's losses set forth in her letter of the 21st March; and was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the general subject of this claim we have no remarks to add to those which we have already had the honour of addressing to your Lordship, except that we must not be understood as having ever advised Her Majesty's Government that this ought to be treated as a case of international wrong on the part of the Government of the United States. Our view has always been, and still is, that this case is distinguished from others by such circumstances as to make it right that Her Majesty's Government should use their good offices to obtain (if possible) redress for Mrs. Molyneux.

With respect to the particular items specified in the letter of Mrs. Molyneux, we think that Mr. Fullerton's estimate of the damage done to the house at Savannah should be accepted, without the additions proposed by Mrs. Molyneux.

With respect to the alleged losses at the farm and house in North Carolina, we think that the affidavit of the farm manager and that of the deceased housekeeper as to the list of articles destroyed may, primâ facie, be relied on. The estimate of Mrs. Molyneux as to their value (though this is not authenticated by proof) should, we think, be forwarded (omitting the claim for her late housekeeper's losses) to Sir F. Bruce.

Mrs. Molyneux must be apprised that Her Majesty's Government cannot do more than recommend her claim to the favourable consideration of the United States' Government; and that it may, not improbably, be met, either wholly or in part, by the statement that American subjects have suffered similar losses during the war, and have not obtained compensation.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd April ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 119), inclosing a pamphlet by Mr. O'Connor, an eminent lawyer of New York, upon the Treasury Agent system of cotton seizure in the South; with the concurrent opinion of Messrs. Lincoln's Inn, June 7, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 158, May 14), reporting that he had been informed by Mr. Seward that, in the opinion of the United States' Judge Advocate-General, no claim on account of losses sustained during the civil war could be entertained by the United States' Government, unless such claim originated in a loyal State; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the subjects of Her Majesty, resident and possessing landed property in the territory of the United States cannot, generally speaking, claim to be placed on a better footing, with respect to compensation, than native citizens. There may be particular cases, the circumstances of which may justify the official intervention of the Government of the foreign subject; but such cases would be exceptions to the general rule. In the absence of information that the case referred to by Sir F. Bruce is such an exceptional one, we are not able to say that there is any ground for the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government against the decision of the Judge-Advocate which is adverse to the British claimant in this case.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 28th of February, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter and its inclosures, from Mr. W. H. Stewart, asserting, as executor of the late Mr. Stewart, the senior member of the firm of Messrs. Hopley and Co., of Charleston, a claim upon the United States' Government on account of cotton belonging to the late Mr. C. E. Stewart, which was destroyed at Camden; and that Mr. Stewart also prefers a claim in respect of cotton seized by the United States' authorities at Charleston; and he further represents that a loss of 52,071 dollars was sustained by the late Mr. C. E. Stewart, in consequence of the repeal, after the suppression of the rebellion, of the currency laws in force in the so-styled Confederate States during the civil war.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these several claims into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this claimant was, and is, entitled, on account of the destruction of his property, to all such remedies (if any such there be), as may be open to an American citizen who, continuing to reside in one of the Confederate States during the war, nevertheless remained loyal to the Government of the United States, but that he cannot, with respect to compensation for damages inflicted upon his testator's property by the army of the United States, or with respect to the effect upon the interest of his testator of the legislation either of the Confederate Government, or of the United States, concerning the paper currency of that country, be placed upon a different footing. If, indeed, he were placed in a worse condition merely because his testator was a British subject, there would be ground for remonstrance by Her Majesty's Government on his behalf; but at present this is not alleged to be the case.

We desire to apply this opinion to each and all of these classes of claims preferred by Mr. Stewart.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to alter the opinions which we expressed as to the particular case of Mr. Barclay, in our Report of July 5, 1865, and, as to the general category of cases under which that of Mr. Barclay falls, on the 7th of June last.

We are, therefore, still of opinion, for the reasons stated in these Reports (hard as Mr. Barclay's case undoubtedly is), that Her Majesty's Government must decline to press the claim of Mr. Barclay upon the United States' Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 12th instant, from the Colonial Office, inclosing, together with an explanatory correspondence, a petition addressed to Mr. Adams by Daniel Mc Sweeny, a citizen of the United States, complaining of his being illegally imprisoned in Ceylon; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to this case, in order that, in forwarding this Memorial to Mr. Adams, your Lordship may be able to make such observations upon it as we might consider advisable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the imprisonment and punishment of this man was legal, and that his complaint is founded upon a misapprehension of the law and the facts. The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received June 29.)

Doctor's Commons, June 28, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the papers, as marked in the accompanying list, relative to the claims on Her Majesty's Government of a Mr. J. A. Machado and Mr. F. J. Medeiros, arising out of the detention by the British authorities on the African coast of the American vessels "Mary Varney" and "Thomas Watson," in the years 1854 and 1857. That the "Mary Varney" was detained by the Colonial authorities at Balhurst, in the River Gambia, in the month of July 1854, on suspicion of having Slave Trade equipments on board; and on being taken for adjudication into the Vice Admiralty Court of that Colony, was released after a detention of twelve days, with costs and damages against the detainers.

That in April 1858, nearly four years after the detention of the "Mary Varney," a claim for compensation to the amount of 50,000 dollars was, for the first time, made on Her Majesty's Government through Mr. Dallas, at that time United States' Minister at this Court. That this claim was referred for the consideration of the Queen's Advocate, who reported that it was well-founded in point of principle, but suspicious as to the delay in bringing it forward, and also in point of amount. That Mr. Dallas was accordingly answered to the effect that whilst Her Majesty's Government were not prepared to justify the seizure of the "Mary Varney," and as no claim for specific damages had been advanced at the time, or at any period antecedent to the date of Mr. Dallas' note of the 6th of April, 1858, Her Majesty's Government could not but feel some surprise at the nature and amount of the claim brought forward, unaccompanied, as it was, by any accounts, vouchers, or items. That the United States' Minister was requested to furnish information on these points; and Her Majesty's Government begged to be distinctly informed whether they were to understand that the Government of the United States had satisfied itself, and if so, upon what grounds, of the entire reasonableness of the amount claimed, or whether that Government merely forwarded the statement of Mr. Machado as to the amount he thought proper to claim (50,000 dollars), without expressing any opinion thereupon. That on the 9th of October, 1858, Mr. Dallas, in acknowledging the receipt of Lord Malmesbury's note, stated that it would be his duty "to abstain from troubling his Lordship with comments on the case of the 'Mary Varney' until it should be in his power to give the distinct reply requested to the inquiry made by his Lordship as to how far and upon what grounds, preliminary to the presentation, the United States' Government were satisfied of its good faith and reasonableness. He confined himself, therefore, to transmitting some additional documents which had reached him a few days since." (These documents consisted of copies of the ship's papers having no reference to the merits of the claim.) That from the date of Mr. Dallas' note of October 9, 1858, up to the receipt of Mr. Adams' letter of the 3rd of March last, no further communication of any kind was received from the United States' Government on the subject of this claim, which now amounts to 108,312 dollars.

That, as regards the case of the "Thomas Watson," this vessel was detained by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Bloodhound," on the 15th of September, 1857, and sent to Sierra Leone for adjudication, on a charged preferred by a coloured British subject against the master of the "Thomas Watson," to the effect that he had detained him on board his ship with the intention of selling him into slavery. That on the arrival of the "Thomas Watson" at Sierra Leone, the proctor engaged by the captors advised them not to take the case into Court, and the vessel was accordingly given up to her master and crew on the 10th of October, having been detained for twenty-five days. That the Queen's Advocate, to whom the case was referred, reported that the seizure was not justifiable, and Her Majesty's Government thereupon, before any complaint had been made of the seizure, expressed to the United States' Government their regret at the occurrence, and at the same time recalled the Commander of the "Bloodhound.".

That in March 1858, a note was received from the United States' Minister at this Court claiming damages to the amount of 60,000 dollars for the owners of the "Thomas Watson," and 20,000 dollars for their agent, Mr. Medeiros. That these claims were referred for the consideration of the Queen's Advocate, and Her Majesty's Government, in conformity with that Officers' Report, demurred to the amount claimed, but stated that, having admitted that the Commander of the "Bloodhound" was to blame in detaining the "Thomas Watson," it necessarily followed that compensation was due, the only question being the amount.

That in order to ascertain what would be a fair amount of compensation, and being desirous that the matter should be promptly and amicably adjusted, Her Majesty's Government instructed the British Consul at New York to place himself in communication with Messrs. Machado and Medeiros, with a view to investigate any statement they might place before them, and to endeavour to settle matters with them.

That the parties interested, however, declined to treat with Mr. Archibald, but stated that they would submit their claim to arbitration; and at the same time informed him that their views respecting such arbitration would be immediately made known to Her Majesty's Government through the United States' Minister in London. That this communication was made by Mr. Machado to Mr. Archibald on the 26th of June, 1858, and from that time up to the receipt of the United States' Minister's note of the 3rd of March last, a period of nearly eight years, these claims have remained in abeyance, no further communication respecting them having been received from the United States' Government or from any other source.

That on the receipt, however, of Mr. Adams' note of the 3rd of March last, your Lordship referred to Her Majesty's Consul at New York, with instructions to that Officer to make inquiries respecting Mr. Machado, and to endeavour to ascertain the causes that led to the delay on the part of Mr. Machado in prosecuting his claim. That the accompanying despatch from Mr. Archibald contains a report on this subject; and that it will be seen from this despatch that the real cause of Mr. Machado's delay in prosecuting his claims was his complicity in slave traffic.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add that as regards Mr. Medeiros, that individual, at the time he was connected with Mr. Machado, was one of the most notorious slave agents on the African Coast, and that by the latest advices received by Her Majesty's Government was still on the West Coast of Africa, engaging, when opportunities offered, in the Slave Trade; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in dealing with these claims.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think it is impossible now to controvert the right of Machado to compensation, if the United States' Government, with full knowledge that he was at the very period when his vessels were seized, a notorious slave dealer, continue to press his claim upon Her Majesty's Government; both because there was no legal evidence which warranted the seizure of these vessels, and because the claim for compensation has been unequivocally recognized by Her Majesty's Government. But I think that all the circumstances of the cases, as they are contained in the Memorandum, should be laid before Mr. Adams, and that he should be apprised that while Her Majesty's Government feel themselves bound to grant compensation, if Mr. Adams, with the light which the subsequent transactions in 1861 (mentioned in Consul Archibald's letter) have thrown upon the character of this man, still think fit to demand it. Nevertheless they must decline to pay down any specific sum until a proper investigation has established the amount which was due to Machado at the time when Her Majesty's Government expressed to the then United States' Minister at this Court (Mr. Dallas), their readiness to entertain and settle the question. It was at the request of that gentleman that the investigation was then delayed; the subject was never adverted to again by him; and although it now appears that Machado suggested in 1858 to Mr. Dallas the name of Mr Joshua Bates as a referee, this suggestion was never imparted to Her Majesty's Government, until the subject was again, after this long interval of silence, brought to their notice in the present year by Mr. Adams.

That Her Majesty's Government cannot therefore be required to pay any sum beyond that which shall be found to have been due at the above-mentioned period, as it is admitted that they are in no way responsible for the delay which has occurred.

If Mr. Adams should still support these claims on the part of his Government, the most expedient arrangement would be, to refer the consideration of the amount of compensation to the decision of two competent persons, with power to call in an umpire, on whom they should agree beforehand.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Memorial from Messrs. Cheetham and Son, together with other papers respecting their claim to be compensated by the United States' Government on account of the destruction of a quantity of cotton, their property, on the occasion of General Sherman's march through the Southern States; and to request that we would take this claim into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that the circumstances of this case do not distinguish it from the other cases, in which a like claim for compensation has been made. We, therefore, apply to it the principle, which we have reported ought to govern such cases; and have the honour to express our opinion that Messrs Cheetham must seek the same redress (if any), for the injury of which they complain, as an American subject would have recourse to in the like circumstances.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Mr. Cosens, the Acting British Consul at Savannah, reporting the circumstances under which a coloured British subject, named Edwards, has been detained in slavery for three years by United States' citizens, and requesting to be informed whether Edwards is not, in equity, entitled to some compensation from the United States' Government on account of his detention, and Mr. Egerton was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That Edwards appears to have been kidnapped in British territory and taken to Georgia by two American citizens, both of whom are now dead. His late master appears to have purchased him with the bonâ fide intention, declared at the time, "of facilitating his return to his native place." He is now free by operation of law. I see no reason why the United States' Government should be made responsible for an illegal act committed without their sanction in a foreign country.

I do not advise that any demand for compensation be made in this case to the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion expressed in the former Report of the Law Officers upon this claim.

That we advise that an answer be sent to Mr. Stewart to the following effect, viz:—

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this Act into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as at present advised, we think the 10th Section of this Act should not be approved of by Her Majesty.

It appears to us that much practical inconvenience and difficulty, leading, perhaps, to serious international questions, would be likely to arise from the attempt of a British Court to exercise a kind of jurisdiction (for such it would be) over "foreign ships, property, and persons," even although such jurisdiction should be exercised at the instance of a foreign Consular Officer.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us two letters from the Colonial Office,* with their inclosures, relative to certain measures adopted or proposed to be passed by the Canadian Legislature, in order to protect the inhabitants of Canada from lawless aggressions from subjects of foreign countries at peace with Her Majesty.

That we should observe from the inclosed papers in what respects these measures are deemed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to require amendment, but that before addressing the Governor-General of Canada the Secretary of State for the Colonies is anxious that our opinion should be taken on the subject, and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we agree with the observations of Lord Carnarvon both upon the Acts which have received Her Majesty's sanction, and upon the Bills which have been unofficially sent to him; and that we think the letter which his Lordship proposes to send to his Excellency the Governor of Canada, is fit and proper to be sent.

Lincoln's Inn, September 7, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 31st ultimo, forwarding the transcript of an Act passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland, relative to the deportation of criminals from that Colony, together with a despatch addressed by the Governor to the late Secretary of State for the Colonies, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, this Act may properly be submitted for the Queen's confirmation. The previous correspondence was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we feel some difficulty as to the words in Section 1, "without delay," coupled with the enactment that if the person does not depart, he may be arrested and detained by any person, and imprisoned without warrant.

There is no provision in the proposed Statute as to who is to say what is "delay" in each case, and as to who is to guard against abuse in "any person" arresting and detaining on the score that there has been delay.

We think the Court should name the time within which the convict is to leave, and then he may be arrested if found in the Colony after that time, and before the expiration of his sentence. And we humbly advise that the proposed Statute should undergo these amendments before it receives the confirmation of Her Majesty.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Stewart, dated the 14th ultimo, whose previous letter respecting his claim upon the United States' Government was answered in conformity with our Report of the 7th ultimo, and Mr. Egerton was to request that we would take Mr. Stewart's present statements into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether they induce us in any respect to alter or modify the opinion we have already given respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Stewart's further letter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter or modify the opinion which we have had the honour to express in our former Report on this subject.

Mr. Stewart has not in his communication to your Lordship of the 14th of August, done more than assert in general terms that his property was seized, while that of American subjects was exempt from seizure, while he, at the same time, explains that this assertion is made not upon any knowledge or information which he possesses or has received, but merely because he "does not know of, and cannot conceive such a case."

Sir,

WE were favoured with your note of the 20th August ultimo, in which you stated that you were directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from Lord Monck, dated the 16th ultimo, respecting the Act recently passed by the Canadian Legislature extending to Lower Canada the law already existing in Upper Canada, authorizing the trial by Militia court-martial of persons in arms against the Queen's forces, and which Act was submitted to us in your letter of the 10th August ultimo.

In compliance with the request contained in your note, we have the honour to report—

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Egerton's letter of the 5th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our letter of the 31st of August last, furnishing your Lordship with our opinion as to certain Acts passed by the Canadian Legislature with regard to aggression by foreign subjects in time of peace, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 3rd ultimo, forwarding two further Acts relating to the same subject, which have been passed by the Parliament of Canada; and Mr. Egerton was to request that we would take these documents into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we see in them anything which modifies the opinion expressed in our letter above referred to.

In obedience to your Lordships commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the documents now forwarded to us, and see nothing in them to induce us to modify the opinion we had the honour to express in our letter of the 31st of August last, although we observe that the Acts have been passed with the retrospective operation which Lord Carnarvon proposed to state could not be sanctioned. The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 30, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Stewart dated the 10th instant, in reply to a letter which was addressed to him in the sense of our Report of the 12th ultimo, respecting his claim to be compensated by the United States' Government on account of property belonging to the late Mr. Stewart, of Charleston, which was destroyed in that city and at the town of Camden by the United States' forces; and to request that we would take Mr. Stewart's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto. The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that an answer should be sent to Mr. Stewart to the following effect: That he seems to misunderstand the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government think it their duty to decline to press his claims upon the Government of the United States. It is not upon the ground that the property of Mr. Stewart may not have suffered injuries for which he is justly entitled to compensation, but upon the ground on which Her Majesty's Government have been invariably advised to act in similar cases, namely, that the position of Mr. Stewart with respect to this American property is, according to the principles of international law, that of an American citizen; and that, therefore, he must seek such redress for his injuries as is incident to an American citizen, and is not entitled to the official interference of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf.

It is also to be observed that although the cities in which the cotton was deposited had capitulated, the war was not at an end; and the destruction of the cotton having taken place in the enemy's country, as a matter of expediency, in the course and conduct of the war, it is scarcely probable that the United States' Government would feel itself called upon to make any redress to Mr. Stewart, and certainly, in these circumstances, none could properly be demanded as a right by Her Majesty's Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 328), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward on the receipt at Washington of the intelligence that Messrs. Lynch and the Rev. J. Mc Mahon had been sentenced to death for their participation in the Fenian raid into Canada last spring.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Seward's note into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which it will be proper to return thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered Mr. Seward's letter, and have the honour to report—

That assuming, as we do, that Lynch and Mc Mahon are citizens of the United States, we see no objection to copies of the record of their trial and conviction being furnished to the Consul of the United States, though it should not be admitted that the United States' Government are entitled, as of right, to demand such copies of the British Government, and we think that Sir F. Bruce should be instructed accordingly; and in reference to Mr. Seward's statement that it might happen that delays might unavoidably result from past incidents, or from future events which cannot now be foreseen, to add that Her Majesty's Government cannot admit that the cause of justice in Canada could be affected by such considerations.

Whether copies should be furnished in every case will depend in some degree upon circumstances as they may arise, but, as a general rule, we think they should be given.

With respect to the examination of the judicial proceedings, with a careful regard to the rights of the United States, and the maintenance of good relations between the two countries, as requested by Mr. Seward, we think the best answer will be that the Canadian Government will endeavour to secure that the laws shall be observed and properly and impartially administered and executed, and with due regard to the rights of the United States and of all who may be interested therein.

That the latter part of Mr. Seward's note involves questions of policy, both with regard to Canada and to the United States, upon which the information now submitted to us would not enable us to form or to express any satisfactory opinion, if any opinion were necessary.

No. 272.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a copy of a despatch from Mr. Seward dated the 17th September ultimo, communicated to him by Mr. Adams, pressing the claims of the citizens of the United States for damages occasioned to them by the "Alabama," "Shenandoah," and other vessels during the late war, and the draft of a despatch to Sir Frederick Bruce on the subject which your Lordship proposes to submit to the consideration of the Cabinet, but before doing so your Lordship wishes to have our opinion on it. Your Lordship, therefore, requested that we would take this draft into our immediate consideration, and furnish you, at our earliest convenience, with any observations which it may occur to us to offer upon it.

Mr. Hammond also stated that he sent us the correspondence respecting these vessels, which had at different times been laid before Parliament, in case we should wish to refer to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our consideration the copy of a despatch from Mr. Seward, and your Lordship's draft despatch to Sir Frederick Bruce referred to in Mr. Hammond's letters, in order to furnish your Lordship with any observations which it might occur to us to offer upon the draft despatch as requested by Mr. Hammond.

We have found it difficult to define the precise limits within which our observations thus generally requested should be kept, and have, therefore, thought it right to state freely all that has occurred to us on the subject.

The proposal that Her Majesty should enter into negotiations for the conclusion of a Convention to provide for the referring to arbitration the first of the two questions mentioned in the draft despatch, and the passages of the draft bearing upon that question appear to us to be open to the following observations:—

The passage relating to the "Alabama," in page 2 of the draft despatch, may possibly be construed as admitting that there was a primâ facie case for her detention was not disclosed and known to Her Majesty's Government before she escaped (though unarmed and unequipped) from England.

We apprehend that the contention on the part of Her Majesty's Government is that the primâ facie case was not disclosed so as to be known to them till it was too late under then existing circumstances to detain her.

In page 8 of the despatch it is stated in reference to the same vessel "the law would have justified her detention." This statement, taken in connection with other parts of the despatch, and with the first proposed question, leads us to conclude that it is intended to admit that, since the law would have justified the detention of the "Alabama," Her Majesty's Government would, if the facts had been known to them in time, have owed a duty to the Government of the United States to detain her; and if this be so, the proper question (if arbitration be decided on) would appear to us to be the following, viz., whether the circumstances of the delay and of the accident by which the "Alabama" was allowed to escape rendered Her Majesty's Government liable for the injuries subsequently inflicted on the commerce of the United States, and this we assume is the point intended to be raised by the first question, though perhaps it might be rendered clearer by a slight alteration in the mode of putting it.

But if it is not intended to admit that a knowledge of the facts before the escape of the vessel would have made it the duty of the British Government to detain her, then the whole subject of liability would be open, and we think the question should rather be to this effect, viz., "were the British Government at any time before the escape from Great Britain of the 'Alabama' under any obligation to the United States to seize and detain her; and were they guilty of any neglect in not having seized and detained her, and for which the Government is responsible."

As to the policy of a reference to arbitration of the first question on either view of the case our opinion is somewhat divided, and as this is not strictly within our province we abstain from expressing any opinion upon it.

In reference to the second proposed question the following observations occur to us:—

The opinion of the late Law Officers was, as we understand, that the transfer of the "Alabama," Shenandoah," and "Georgia" to the command of commissioned officers of the Confederate States, did confer on those vessels the character of ships of war, and entitled Great Britain to treat them accordingly in British ports. In this opinion we concur.

If it were intended to refer the expediency of this state of international law for the future to arbitration, it would appear to us to be rather a subject for discussion and decision amongst all the leading maritime Powers than for an arbitration between Great Britain and the United States. But we presume from the whole tenor of Mr. Seward's despatch, and of the draft reply thereto, that the decision upon the reference of this question is to have some bearing upon the question, whether any and what amount is to be ultimately awarded to the American Government, or to the subjects of that Government, in respect of the claims now brought forward by Mr. Seward.

This involves, therefore, an inquiry by the referees as to what are the principles of international law applicable to this subject.

So far as it may be in our province to express an opinon on this question we feel bound to say that such a reference to arbitration is, in our opinion, inexpedient.

There are also some minor points on which we venture to offer one or two remarks.

Mr. Seward, in the third paragraph of his despatch, speaks of the political excitements in Great Britain during the progress and at the conclusion of the war, as having rendered that period unfavourable to an examination of the questions now brought forward. This statement may probably have been thought unimportant, but we think it right to call attention to the fact that it does not appear to us to be directly challenged by anything contained in the draft despatch.

Nor is the reference contained in the fifteenth paragraph of Mr. Seward's despatch to "a disregard of the obligations of Treaties," noticed, so far as we are aware, in the draft despatch. This again may have been advisedly omitted, and we refer to it only that it may receive consideration if it has not already done so.

It may be also worth consideration whether the form of expression in page 12 of the draft despatch, as to its being impossible "for Her Majesty's present advisers to abandon the ground which has been taken by former Governments," may not admit of a construction by Mr. Seward that the views of the present Government are not in entire accordance on the subject there referred to with their predecessors.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of November instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 23rd instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us an amended draft of the despatch which it is proposed to address to Sir F. Bruce in answer to the note from Mr. Seward to Mr. Adams, relative to the "Alabama" and other claims; and Mr. Hammond requested that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the proposed alteration of the first draft despatch, and with reference to the following statement, namely, "The same objection, however, does not necessarily apply to other questions which may be at issue between the two Governments in reference to the late war; and with regard to these I have to instruct you to ascertain from Mr. Seward whether the United States' Government will be prepared to accept the principle of arbitration as proposed above," it occurs to us that this passage would probably be considered by the United States' Government to pledge Her Majesty's Government to an arbitration upon all the other claims raised by Mr. Seward. This would, we think, be objectionable.

If, however, it be thought desirable not to state the questions in the despatch, we would suggest the substitution of a passage to the following effect: "That upon the other matters at issue between the two Governments, if the questions could be defined, and should, when so defined, appear to be such as might properly be made the subject of arbitration between the two countries, Her Majesty's Government would not be unwilling to adopt such a mode of disposing of the other existing differences."

We may, however, be permitted to add that, if arbitration be decided upon, it appears to us to be more desirable for Her Majesty's Government to consider and define in the first instance what questions they will be willing to refer to arbitration.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 7, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for perusal, and for any other observations we may have to offer thereupon, the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile,* relative to the case of the "Meteor," a vessel condemned by Judge Betts on the ground that she was destined for a Chilean privateer, and of other vessels purchased in American ports which are said to be on their way to Chile.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused and considered these despatches, and have the honour to report—

That the circumstances connected with the seizure and condemnation of the "Meteor," and her subsequent release on bail while the case was under appeal to the Supreme Court will very probably be of importance in any future discussions on the subject of the "Alabama;" but that the information on the subject contained in the despatches and accompanying papers now before us is too informal, incomplete, and uncertain to justify Her Majesty's Government in treating it as a foundation for any argument in their diplomatic intercourse with the United States' Government. That it will, therefore, be advisable to obtain, if possible, a full report of the case, and an authentic copy of Judge Betts' judgment, with evidence of the facts and circumstances connected with the vessel having been after appeal released or given up to the owners on bail.

That the pamphlet entitled "Pro bono Publico" appears to show some amount of public opinion in America opposed to the contentions of Mr. Seward in the case of the "Alabama," but that it does not occur to us that this circumstance can be of much (if any) importance in reference to any of the subjects now under discussion with the United States' Government.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th of December instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 1st instant, with its inclosures, from Mr. Alfred Cox relative to his claim against the Government of the United States for the destruction of his property, at Meridian, by the forces under General Sherman during the American War in 1864; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Cox's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the case of Mr. Alfred Cox does not differ in principle from many others of the same kind, as to which we have had the honour to report to the Foreign Office. We therefore think an answer to Mr Alfred Cox should be sent to the following effect:—

That it appears that Mr. Alfred Cox "settled" in Mississippi in 1856; that the alleged injury was inflicted on his landed and other property by the military forces of the United States during the late civil wars in that country; that Her Majesty's Government must adhere to the rule on which they have hitherto acted in many similar cases and decline to interfere officially on behalf of Mr. Alfred Cox; and that with respect to the property in question Mr. Cox must have recourse to whatever remedy or redress the law of the United States affords to one of its own citizens in such circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused and considered Mr. King's letter, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. King should be apprized by your Lordship, that his case belongs to a class which, the Law Officers have advised Her Majesty's Government, are not proper subjects for the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government. The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 13.)

Doctors' Commons, January 12, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Edwardes, lately Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 89, October 25, 1865), and one from Mr. Harrison (No. 5, December 9, 1865), who is acting temporarily in that capacity, inclosing their correspondence with the Venezuelan Government on the subject of the nationality of persons born in Venezuela; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make on the subject generally, and especially on the point respecting British claims.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Edwardes has stated the matter very properly to the Venezuelan Government. It seems to me clear that this new law ought not to affect the position of British claimants whose claims had accrued previously to the passing of this law, and the argument that the law is not retroactive but explanatory, is inadmissible.

* Mr. Cox, December 1; to Mr. Cox, December 15, 1866.

Previously to the passing of it, as I understand the facts, practice and usage had interpreted the law as treating the children of foreign subjects, though born in the Venezuelan territory, as foreigners. To pass a law now explaining that the law had never meant to consider such persons as foreigners, is substantially to pass a retroactive law to the injury of foreigners.

I adhere to the opinion expressed in my former Report on this subject.

Doctors' Commons, January 16, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 23rd ultimo, relative to the claims of British subjects against the Venezuelan Government, and to my Report of the 20th March, 1865, relative to the claim of Messrs. Schloss and Co. and Michelson, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Harrison, now in charge of Her Majesty's Legation at Caracas, on the subject of this claim (No. 4, December 9, 1865); and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, together with the previous papers, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the case as it now stands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have again perused the papers in this case.

I do not find that any point is now raised by the Venezuelan Government which is not discussed in my Report of March 20, 1865. I therein stated, among other matters, my opinion that the claim could not be barred by not having been presented within a period arbitrarily named by the debtor; the condition being, in the circumstances, illegal and impossible. To this Report I beg leave now to refer. I will only now repeat that this debt has been distinctly recognised by Lord Aberdeen (see despatch of Lord Canning April 9, 1857), and, I think, also by your Lordship; and that directions have been given to Her Majesty's Representative at Caracas to procure the payment of it. It was a debt due by the Colombian Republic when undivided. Venezuela is now, as I understand the case, the only one of the three Republics (though I am not sure about Ecuador) into which Colombia has been divided which has not paid its share of that debt.

The obligation to pay this share has also been formally recognized by a Venezuelan Government which preceded the present one. I observe that Mr. Edwardes does not comment upon this claim in his recent elaborate Report, I presume because it was considered to be one no longer open to discussion. Mr. Harrison incloses, without comment, the reply of the Venezuelan Government.

I will only add that if, notwithstanding the former recognition of the validity of this claim, your Lordship should be of opinion that the merits of the case should again be inquired into, it would be proper, I humbly think, that Her Majesty's Representative should be directed to institute such an inquiry; if, on the other hand, your Lordship be of opinion that the case has been for some time closed, and that no new or sufficient argument has been adduced for its being reopened, instructions to this effect should be sent to Her Majesty's Representative at Caracas.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. H. R. Hartman, complaining of the proposed reduction of the amount of his claim against the Venezuelan Government from 362,198 dollars, at which he had originally fixed it, to 8,000 dollars, which Mr. Edwardes, after a legal investigation of this claim, considered to be a fair compensation for his losses, and requesting that the case, with all the documents and proofs which he was ready to bring forward in support of it, might be reconsidered. A further letter from Mr. Hartman forwarding those documents, together with the previous papers connected with this case, and Mr. Edwardes' Report on Venezuelan claims, including that of Mr. Hartman, and which has been already submitted to me, was also transmitted; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Hartman's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is no reason whatever for believing that this claim of Mr. Hartman was not duly considered by Mr. Edwardes in the Report he made upon the Venezuelan claims. Your Lordship will recollect the strong and emphatic condemnation which Mr. Edwardes passes upon the scandalous manner in which these claims of British subjects upon the Venezuelan Government have been exaggerated and inflated, when they have not been wholly fictitious, and upon the unfortunate facility with which they were at one time received and recognized by Her Majesty's Legation. In that Report he speaks as follows of Mr. Hartman's claim: "I need say but little about Mr. R. Hartman's claim. He wants 362,198 dollars, or between 55,000*l.* and 56,000*l.* sterling, because, he says, he was prevented for about two years from working upon an estate the whole value of which does not amount to 40,000 dollars. However, he has told me that he was instructed to make his claim as large as possible. Originally he certainly was steward upon the estate, and I do not feel by any means certain that he ever was anything else."

And in the extract from the Report, which is the last document in the volume sent with the papers, Mr. Edwardes gives satisfactory reasons for showing that 8,000 dollars is a full compensation for any just claims which Mr. Hartman has against the Venezuelan Government.

It is to be observed also that, according to the Report of Mr. Orme (June 7, 1861, Caracas, No. 47) this estate, of which Mr. Hartman first took the management, and afterwards became the lessee, belonged to "a notorious Federal and opponent of the Government, and that at a time when the civil war was, as he (Mr. Hartman) perfectly well knew, at its highest, has been an object of constant suspicion on the part of the Government, and the circumstance of the Federals having frequently visited his estate and his house tended to increase the suspicion." And it further appears from the concluding part of the inventory attached to the lease now forwarded by Mr. Hartman (Inclosure No. 5) that Soledad Lander, the lessor of the property in question to Mr. Hartman, at the very time when the lease was made, reserved "the right of reclamation against all such persons" who had caused the losses and damages to property which at that time the owner had suffered.

I entirely agree with the opinion formerly expressed by the Law Officers, February 5, 1861, upon this very case of Mr. Hartman, as to the principle of international law applicable to all cases of this description. "We do not think," they say, "that the Venezuelan Government can be held responsible generally for injuries inflicted on the property or persons of British subjects, or other foreigners, resident in the country by insurgents engaged in open and armed hostility to the Government; and which injuries the Government had not the power to prevent. A foreigner cannot claim to be placed in a better situation than the natural-born subjects of the country. If the country be invaded by the enemy, and the foreigner's property is injured by the invading army, he has no title to claim compensation. Injury caused by insurgents or rebels is subject to the same rule. If, indeed, the Government having the power to do so, neglects, or wilfully abstains, from putting down the insurgents, it may be regarded as an accomplice in the act complained of, and there would be a right in the foreigner to demand compensation."

They go on to say, "In the case before us we find no sufficient ground for alleging that the injuries complained of would not have occurred but for gross neglect on the part of the Venezuelan Government; and we do not think, therefore, that the facts, as far as we can ascertain them, would justify a demand for compensation."

In the former Report which I had the honour to make to your Lordship I advised that the Report of Mr. Edwardes should be adhered to. I retain that opinion. And I think that an answer should be sent to Mr. Hartman to the following effect:—That after a careful reconsideration of all the documents connected with the case, your Lordship sees no reason to doubt that the conclusion at which Mr. Edwardes arrived is, on the whole, well-founded, and that the sum at which he places the compensation due to Mr. Hartman from the Venezuelan Government is proper. That it is questionable whether any compensation whatever ought to be demanded on behalf of Mr. Hartman, inasmuch as it is, generally speaking, a sound principle of international law that the foreigner who purchases or leases land in a State is not entitled to any other remedy than that which the law affords to a native in similar circumstances; and it is also a sound principle of international law that a Government, during a civil war, is not, generally speaking, responsible for injuries the consequences of that war, done to the property of foreign residents, in any greater degree than it is responsible for injuries inflicted upon the landed property of native subjects. That it is clear that when Mr. Hartman undertook the management of this property, he was aware that a civil war was then raging, and that the property belonged to an opponent of the Government. That, therefore, it is only in consequence of the negotiations and other special circumstances which have preceded this claim of Mr. Hartman that it can be properly entertained at all by Her Majesty's Government; and that they must adhere to the Report of the Diplomatic authority to whom they entrusted the investigation of all these claims by British subjects upon the Venezuelan Government.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas, reporting on the conduct of the Government of Venezuela in evading the payment of their obligations to foreign holders of their bonds; and to call my attention to the suggestion thrown out by Mr. Fagan, that the administration of the Custom-houses should in some manner be brought under the control of the bondholders, with a view of obtaining a settlement of their claims. And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this portion of Mr. Fagan's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether in case such a plan were adopted, it would be considered as an act of hostility against Venezuela, or only a justifiable act of seizure on behalf of creditors, every other method of recovering their debts having been exhausted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would be impossible to distinguish the forcible seizure of the principal Venezuelan Custom-houses, and the placing them under British administration, for however good a purpose, from an act of reprisals, which would border very closely upon an act of positive war. That such an act done for the purpose specified, and at the request of the Venezuelan Government, would be open to no objection arising out of principles of international law, but would be a question of expediency for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 4th June, 1864, in regard to Captain Matthews' claim against the Venezuelan Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosures, which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 29), respecting this claim; and was also to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon; and for convenience the former papers connected with this claim were transmitted to me.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise your Lordship that this case ought to be further pressed upon the Venezuelan Government.

Captain Matthews might be apprized that Her Majesty's Government regret that the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative have not induced the Venezuelan Government to take a more favourable view of his claim, but they cannot, with propriety, interfere further on his behalf.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 13, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas reporting the circumstances under which the English crew of the steamer "Bolivar," which they had navigated from England to be employed in the service of the Government of Venezuela, had seized the vessel and sailed away as was supposed for Trinidad; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government can take any steps in regard to these proceedings.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that as Her Majesty's subjects have many outstanding claims against the Government of Venezuela, which that Government, notwithstanding its repeated promises, continues to delay payment, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the vessel might not be attached by Her Majesty's Government in a British port with a view to its value being made available for the satisfaction, as far as it might go, of British claims.

A previous despatch, reporting the arrival of the "Bolivar" at La Guaiva, was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That three questions appear to be raised by the papers laid before us, upon which our opinion is desired.

The first, relates to the ship.

The second to the crew; and

The third to the right of the British Government to detain the ship as part payment of a debt owing from the Venezuelan Government to certain subjects of Her Majesty.

With respect to the first question, it appears from the papers before us that the Venezuelan Government have purchased and paid for the "Bolivar," and that she is now the property of that Government, but that she has been sailing as an armed vessel without the consent of that Government, and without lawful commission or lawful flag, and was supposed to have entered the port or harbour of Trinidad. Assuming these facts to be accurately stated we should, if the vessel had been and remained at Trinidad, have been of opinion that instructions should be given to the proper authorities there to detain her, and by force if necessary; and that the Venezuelan Government should have been immediately apprised that she was so detained and that no objection would be offered by Her Majesty's Government to the Venezuelan Government taking possession of her by any legal means; and we were about to report to this effect, but we have seen in the newspapers of yesterday a statement which leads to the belief that this vessel had arrived in the Medway and is in the custody of the authorities there. If so, we think that the vessel should remain in that custody, and that a communication to the purport and effect of that above suggested should now be made to the Venezuelan Government.

2ndly. With respect to the crew. We understand from the papers before us that they were enlisted in the service of a foreign State and have since, without the authority of that State, possessed themselves of the ship and taken her, first, to Trinidad, and afterwards brought her to this country of their own authority. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere in any way on their behalf with the Venezuelan Government.

With regard to the third question. We are of opinion that having regard to the circumstances in which this vessel came within Her Majesty's dominions, it would not be right or expedient that Her Majesty's Government should seize the vessel as an instalment of a debt due from the Venezuelan Government to Her Majesty's subjects. Such an act would be one of reprisals, removed only one step from the declaration of actual war; and such a proceeding ought not, we think, in any case, to be taken without due preliminary notice to the State which is to be affected by it.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Miss Young,* requesting to be allowed access to certain documents supposed to be deposited in the archives of Her Majesty's Legation at Rio de Janeiro. The former correspondence, as marked in the margin,† together with a Memorandum on the subject of Miss Young's claim, was also inclosed;‡ and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which may properly be taken in the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the request of Miss Young is reasonable, and should be granted by your Lordship. The agent of Miss Young might be allowed to see the papers in the office of the Consulate, under the superintendence of some person appointed by the Consul; and the Consul might furnish attested copies of any papers material for the establishment of Miss Young's claim. But I think that any expense caused by such copying should be defrayed by Miss Young.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro (No. 32), forwarding translations of various documents connected with the claim of Mr. Reeve against the Government of Brazil.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous correspondence, as marked in the margin, connected with this claim; and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have read the voluminous documents in this case, which contain all the evidence produced, the arguments of Counsel, and the decisions of the Courts, relative to these questions of the maternity of Deolinda Roza de Vasconcellos, and the will of Robert James Kenny.

‡ Memorandum, January 24, 1866.

It is clear that, if this woman was the mother of Robert James Kenny, she was entitled, by the law of Brazil, which properly governed the case, to the two-thirds of the estate of Robert James Kenny, notwithstanding his will.

The Brazilian Tribunals have decided that she was the mother, though, with an inconsistency pointed out by Mr. Thornton—favourable, however, to Mr. Reeve, the British claimant—(who purchased the interest of the legatees in the will), they decided that the deceased, not being proved to be ignorant of his mother, had, by law, a right to dispose of the remaining third part of his property, which, it appears, has been received by Mr. Reeves.

The only question for your Lordship is, whether these decisions were so plainly contrary to justice as to render it necessary and proper that Her Majesty's Government should interfere, by application to the Government of Brazil, to protect the interests of the British subject who was injured by these judgments. I am clearly of opinion that no such grounds exist for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. I am not satisfied that the Judgment was wrong according to the Brazilian laws and rules of evidence; and I certainly see no reason to ascribe any corrupt or bad motive to the Judges, or to doubt that they arrived in good faith at the conclusions embodied in their sentence.

I agree entirely with the view which Mr. Thornton takes of this case, in his letter of April 2, 1866, No. 32; and I must advise your Lordship that this case now presents, however suspicious its former aspect may have been, no circumstances which call for any official intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

Doctors' Commons, July 19, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 5th February last, relative to a grant for cutting mahogany made to Messrs. Vaughan by the Government of the Mosquito territory, respecting which a discussion has arisen with the Government of Nicaragua, he was directed by your Lordship to forward to me a despatch on that subject from Mr. Mathew, late Her Majesty's Minister in Costa Rica (No. 17, May 9). A Report on Mr. Mathew's despatch from Mr. Green, formerly Her Majesty's Consul at Greytown, together with the former papers, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the right of the Nicaraguan Government with regard to the Mosquito Reserve.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the construction of the Treaty of Managua (1860) which is contended for by Mr. Mathew and Mr. Green, and which appears to have also the sanction of my predecessor in office, is, in my opinion, correct. And that the Mosquito Government have all the rights of ownership within the reserved district, in which must be included the right of cutting timber; and that the Government of Nicaragua have no title or authority to interfere with the exercise of this right on the part of the Mosquito Government. I have no information as to the "satisfactory answer" which Don Silva declares Mr. Vaughan received from the Foreign Office on this subject. The papers before me would lead to the conclusion that the statement must be erroneous, inasmuch as Lord Clarendon, in his despatch of February 16, apprises Messrs. Vaughan and Co. that "the grant made to you by the Nicaraguan Government must be considered invalid unless you can obtain the sanction of the Mosquito Indians confirming it."

Doctors' Commons, January 24, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Panama,* relative to the case of a British subject named George Holmes who was shot at Colon by a sentry from the United States' ship "James Adger"; and Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a correspondence with the Columbian Minister at this Court, and a despatch which your Lordship has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on this subject,† and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not find in these papers any precise statement of the claims preferred by the United States to jurisdiction over the place in which this murder was committed.

Reference is made by the President of Panama, in his letter of 20th November, 1865, to the United States' Consul, of a despatch upon the subject addressed by the President to the United States' Government, but I do not find any copy of this despatch.

I have looked at the Treaty between the United States and New Granada, 1846, but I am not aware, at present, of any foundation for the claim of exclusive jurisdiction so asserted by the United States' Consul.

The course which has been adopted, both by the President of Panama, by the Government of Colombia, and by your Lordship, appears to me right and proper.

It is obvious that in any case the criminal ought not to escape justice altogether, and that it is the duty of the United States' Government, if they can establish satisfactorily their claim to exclusive jurisdiction, to cause this person primâ fâcie guilty of an unprovoked murder, to be properly tried by their own authority.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence regarding the claim of this country, under the IVth Article of the Treaty with Colombia, of 1825, to be admitted to certain privileges given on condition of reciprocity to Venezuela and Ecuador, by the Commercial Treaty lately concluded by Colombia with these Republics; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, together with the Treaty of 1825 (see Hertslet's Treaties, vol. iii, p. 56), and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether and how far Her Majesty's Government will be justified in insisting upon the interpretation already put by them on the IVth Article of that Treaty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the plain construction of Article IV of the Treaty of 18th April, 1825, between Great Britain and Colombia, it is not legally competent to Colombia to refuse to admit into her ports the native produce of Great Britain at the lower rate of duty which she now concedes to the native produce of Venezuela and Ecuador.

It is, of course, a matter for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether, as it appears that Venezuela and Ecuador have procured this advantage by a remission of their own duties of importation, a course which Great Britain does not intend to adopt, this strict fulfilment of the obligations of the Treaty shall be pressed upon Colombia.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received April 5.)

Doctors' Commons, April 5, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, with its inclosures (No. 6), from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Bogota, relative to a claim which Mr. R. A. Joy, the Agent of the Magdalena Steam Navigation Company, has instituted against the Colombian Government for the seizure by the military authorities of the State of Magdalena of the "Antioquia," a vessel belonging to the above Company. A previous despatch (No. 36) of Mr. O'Leary's containing a copy of a law passed by the Columbian Congress in 1864 relative to the navigation of the rivers of the Republic, and to which reference is made by Mr. O'Leary in his present despatch, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That I am of opinion—

1st. That this Company still retains its character of one formed at New York under the law of the United States; and that as Mr. Joy claims as the agent of that Company, it is incumbent on the Government of the United States, and not on Her Majesty's Government, to interfere in this matter.

2ndly. That if Her Majesty's Government should think that Mr. Joy on the ground of his being a British subject has a claim to their assistance, that then I agree with Mr. O'Leary that the liability of the Colombian Government is limited to the period which intervenes between the day of her capture, and that on which the President of the State of the Magdalena offered to place the vessel at the disposal of Mr. Joy; and that as the Columbian Government is willing to accept this liability so limited, and to abide by the decision of the Tribunals as to the amount of indemnity to be awarded to the Company, there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

I also agree with Mr. O'Leary on the construction which he puts on the law of the 24th of May, 1856, and the applicability of that law in the circumstances to the owners of the "Antioquia."

No. 58 A.

Doctors' Commons, December 21, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that two questions have lately arisen between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States of Colombia (formerly styled the Republic of New Granada) on which your Lordship is desirous to learn my opinion. That the first question is, whether the Government of the United States of Colombia has a right to levy a transit-rate on British mails conveyed across the Isthmus of Panamá by the Panamá Railway Company. The circumstances under which this question has arisen are detailed in the accompanying Memorandum which has been prepared at the Foreign Office.

The second question is, as to the right of the Colombian Government to levy tonnage-dues in the ports of the Republic on British steam-vessels conveying mails, and especially in the ports at either terminus of the Panamá Railway. That this point is also touched upon in the Memorandum above mentioned.

That the Government of the United States have uniformly resisted the imposition by the Colombian Government either of a transit-tax upon the United States' mails crossing the Isthmus of Panamá or of tonnage-dues upon their vessels in the ports at the Atlantic and Pacific termini of the railway. That it is believed that the ground on which the Government of the United States insists on an exemption from any such charges is, that under the charter granted by the New Granadian Government to the Railway Company no authority but the Company has any right to levy charges upon the railway or in the ports at either terminus; and that it appears, from a despatch lately received from Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Panamá (private, November 2, 1866), that the United States will resist by force, if necessary, any attempt to impose such charges.

For my perusal some correspondence which has taken place on this subject was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to state that, if I should wish for any further information than that which those papers afford, your Lordship would supply it.

That the questions are of considerable importance for this country, especially as mails for New Zealand and Australia are now sent by way of the Isthmus; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to receive my Report at my earliest convenience, in order that your Lordship may send suitable instructions to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá and to Her Majesty's Consul at Panamá.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that, in the negotiation of a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation which was signed between Great Britain and the United States of Colombia on the 16th February last, Her Majesty's Government proposed an Article securing to Great Britain the transit of the Isthmus for passengers, goods, and correspondence on the same terms as might be granted to or allowed to be enjoyed by any other foreign nation. That that Article was refused by the Colombian negotiator, and was ultimately omitted from the Treaty. A copy of the Treaty was also inclosed.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 17th and 19th instant, transmitting further papers in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the importance of the questions submitted to me, and the multiplicity of documents which it has been necessary to peruse, have prevented me from making an earlier Report to your Lordship.

That the Articles in the Decree of the Colombian Government which have given rise to the present controversy are as follows:—"Article I. The vessels of those nations with which there exist no Postal Conventions shall be subjected to the payment of tonnage duties, and be required to deliver the mails in the respective post-offices; failing to comply with which duty, the mails will not be allowed to proceed to their destination." "Article II. The vessels of the French line of St. Nazaire, as well as those belonging to nations with which there exist Postal Conventions, or special Treaties upon the guarantee of the Isthmus, shall enjoy the privileges which said Convention or Treaties concede."

That the abstract right of every independent State to regulate the conditions under which it will admit the goods or the mails of foreign States within its dominions is unquestionable; but, like other abstract rights, it may be so totally or partially abandoned, or modified in favour of foreign States, as to give them rights which cannot be arbitrarily, and without notice, if at all, taken away from them without their consent. Independently, however, of these general observations, the case as to the territorial rights of the local Government over the Isthmus of Panamá is at the present date one sui generis. The jus transitûs over the Isthmus, which is the connecting link between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, has been now for some years the subject of special Treaties between the great commercial States, and especially between England and the United States of America, as well as between foreign States and the Government of the territory in which the Isthmus is placed; and it may be doubted whether it would now be competent to the Government of Colombia arbitrarily to close against foreign States in time of peace this great highway of the civilized world. The President of Panamá appears to be aware of the peculiar character impressed by usage and circumstances upon the Isthmus. "It is evident," he says, "that the resistance the tonnage-tax meets with is only based on custom, if such may be said. The whole world is already accustomed to the free use of the interoceanic route without meeting with any sort of drawback; and such is the force of habit—particularly when it produces advantageous results—that any change becomes vexing, and is looked upon as an abuse," &c. ("Panamá and Star Herald," November 13, 1866.)

But however this may be, it was no doubt competent to the Colombian Government to prescribe the conditions under which, as to the payment of tolls, navigation dues, and the like, the transit should be used.

And here, with reference to the recent Decree, which, it is to be remarked, is clearly framed in a spirit of direct hostility to British interests, two questions seem to arise:—1. Whether it be competent to the Colombian State to concede with respect to this peculiar jus transitûs in time of peace, immunities to one foreign State, from which others are excluded. 2. Whether in fact the Colombian State has not given over its rights and authority in this matter, by the terms of the Charter, to an independent Railway Company.

As to the first point, the Colombian State has directly exempted the United States of North America and France by the terms of the Decree, from the payment of those dues which it now demands from Great Britain; and first, it is to be noticed that the reasons which it alleges for both these exceptions are obvious pretexts, for the exemption is not accorded to the United States, as the Colombian Government allege, on account of the guarantee contained in the Treaty of 12th December, 1846,[*] which has no stipulation to that effect, though it does contain one to the effect that the United States shall be entitled to equality of treatment with New Granada (as the Colombian State was then called). Nor is any such exemption conceded to France on account of the Postal Treaty, which has been for twenty years a dead letter, which was granted long before the construction of the Panamá Railway, and which grants no privilege to French mails conveyed across the Isthmus, except in the cases of privileges being accorded to another foreign State;[†] and this new Colombian Decree purports to grant (Article II) to France, only the privilege contained in this Treaty. For the construction put upon this Article by Mr. Bunch seems to me correct.

I think, therefore, that the position taken up by Earl Russell, in his letter of 28th September, 1865, to General Mosquera, is warranted by the principles of international law, applicable to the very special circumstances of the postal transit over the Isthmus:—"Her Majesty's Government cannot consent to pay any charge whatever upon the passage of British mails which is not made upon, and the payment of which is not actually enforced upon, the mails of every other foreign Power." It was after due notice being given to the Colombian Government of the determination of Her Majesty's Government that the Colombian Government refused the peace-making clause proposed by Lord Clarendon to be inserted in the Treaty of 17th October, 1866. And that Government has no right to be surprised if Her Majesty's Government now execute the intention of which Earl Russell distinctly apprized them in 1865.

With respect to the remaining question, whether the Colombian State has not given over its rights and authority in this matter by the Charter granted to an independent Railway Company:—

It appears to me that the United States' Government are justified in answering, as they have done, this question in the affirmative. The case stands thus:—The Colombian Government transfers to a foreign Railway Company, by a solemn charter, all right of transit over the Isthmus in return for a railway executed by foreign skill, industry, and capital, reserving to themselves a stipulated portion of the profit. This Charter, for such a purpose as uniting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, cannot be considered as affecting merely the subscribing parties to it. It gave public notice—so to speak—to every civilized State in the world, that the State within whose territorial limits the channel of communication between the two hemispheres was to be made, had conceded for a certain period to a particular corporate body, all authority and emoluments—with a certain specified reservation—incident to its construction and management.

On the faith of this contract foreign States had a right to rely; to enter into stipulations with the foreign Company or Corporation whom the Colombian State had to so large an extent invested with its own original rights and authority in this matter. They had a right to put the obvious and national construction on the terms of the Charter or instrument,—to enter, as Great Britain had done, with that Company, into engagements of a costly and complicated character, affecting the postal relations of the mother country with its numerous Colonies in all parts of the world; and any subsequent act of the grantor of the Charter, whereby it exercised to the injury of foreign States the rights which, by the plain language of the instrument, it had parted with to the Company, is a wrong to those States to which they are not obliged to submit.

The President of Panamá admits, as to the Decree in question, which he has "seriously considered," that "it interferes in the most direct manner with the free transit over the Isthmus," and "besides may give rise to questions with those countries principally sustaining this traffic."[*]

With respect to the demand by the Colombian Government that the letters of foreign States shall be deposited in the Post Office, it must be admitted that it is competent to the Colombian Government to enforce the clause in the contract with the Railway Company which imposes this necessity; but it is not competent to that Government, by pretending to enforce this clause after having allowed it to be a dead letter ever since it was inserted, practically to stop the postal communications of the civilized world by the interoceanic route.

Before they now enforce the clause, they are bound, at least, to show that they have provided the proper and necessary means of forwarding the letters which they require to be deposited in the office. The President of Panamá puts their present incapacity to discharge their duty beyond all doubt. His language is so just and pertinent that I desire to cite it:—"As far as the mails are concerned, the execution of the Decree of the 17th August on the Isthmus would certainly cause grievous inconveniences, giving as an infallible result their detention here or at Colon for many hours, and consequently the discredit of this interoceanic route. If the Consuls would agree to have their mails sent to the Post Offices where there are no means of despatching them, they would remain there a long time. According to the 29th Article of the Panamá Railroad Contract, the Company is only to receive such packages of mails as are delivered by the Post Offices; and it would be difficult to enforce on the Company the fulfilment of this clause, which the National Government has looked upon with so much indifference, and which, to say the truth, has been violated by themselves. In fact, the correspondence for the interior of the Republic was usually sent through the British Consul, with whom the Company treated directly. I am sure that when the President of the Union will be fully acquainted with all these circumstances, he will see clearly the bad results it would have on the transit to insist on even the transit mails being delivered to the national Post Offices."[*]

The amount of injury and inconvenience inflicted upon Great Britain may be estimated from the letter of the Postmaster-General to Mr. Hammond (31st October, 1866):—

"On the faith of arrangements made long since with the Panamá Railway Company, acting under the powers conferred upon it, by its agreement with the Government of the Republic, British mails intended to be conveyed from Panamá to ports in Ecuador, Bolivia, Peru, and Chile by mail-packets subsidized by this country, and sent by each British mail-packet to Colon, and forwarded by means of the railway across the Isthmus, return mails for England being in like manner carried by the British mail packets to Panamá transmitted by the railway to Colon, and there put on board the British West India packets. Since June last, also, mails between this country and New Zealand have been sent monthly to Colon and Panamá by British mail-packets, and transmitted across the Isthmus by the railway. Any interruption or delay of these mails in the course of their transmission would be fraught with most serious consequences to persons interested in the correspondence, and it is desirable, therefore, that steps should be taken to prevent any interference on the part of the Colombian Government."

It would of course be desirable to adjust both the questions in controversy, namely, 1st, as to the detention of the mails in the Post Office; and 2ndly, the tonnage dues, by any reasonable arrangement. But, in the meanwhile, Her Majesty's Government will be [illegible]ly warranted, in my opinion, in taking their stand, with respect to both these questions, upon the position that the Colombian Government, maintaining amicable relations with Great Britain, ought not to impose upon her obligations, with respect to the commercial and pacific use of the Isthmus, from which she exempts the two other great commercial States of the world, the United States of North America and France.

No. 98 A.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received December 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 31, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of December, 1866, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to ask our opinion on the following matter:—

The Kingdom of Hanover has, as we are aware, been annexed by conquest to the Kingdom of Prussia.

That a question is now pending between the King of Prussia and the ex-King of Hanover, in regard to the amount of compensation to be made by the former to the latter for the private property of the House of Hanover.

That Her Majesty's Government have no knowledge as to the nature and place of deposit of that private property which is to be subject of compensation; whether it merely consists in property in money, houses, furniture, jewels, pictures, and such like articles, which have fallen into the possession of Prussia on the annexation of the Kingdom of Hanover, or whether under the definition of private property to be surrendered in return for compensation is included property belonging to the House of Hanover, whether invested for a length of time in the English funds, or jewels and other moveable property belonging to the Crown of Hanover, and forwarded to this country for security on the breaking out of the late war, and subject equally with the funded property to family entails.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see by the inclosed statement of the family laws of the House of Hanover that the Queen has a contingent interest in the family entails of that House.

That the point therefore on which your Lordship would be glad to have our early opinion is, whether any steps can be taken, under the circumstances which he had set forth, and which are all that are within your Lordship's knowledge, to secure the reversionary interests of the Queen in the property now subject to the family entails, or to the compensation awarded by the King of Prussia to the King of Hanover in lieu thereof; and if so, what those steps should be.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear from the papers sent to us that Her Majesty has any interest in the question now pending between the King of Prussia and the ex-King of Hanover, except such interest as may be incident to the contingent right of Her Majesty to the Throne and Kingdom of Hanover. The two sets of extracts from the Hanoverian Law of Succession relate entirely to the Throne and Kingdom, except clause 6 of the Laws of 19th November, 1836, which does not affect the present question. We apprehend that by the jus victoris the King of Prussia has a right to at least all property, moveable and immoveable, which appertained to the Crown and Kingdom, and which the Sovereign could not sever from the Crown. We think that, if, following usage which has sometimes prevailed, the conqueror concedes property to the conquered Sovereign, or make him compensation for property taken, the property so restored, or such compensation as may be made, must be deemed to be the free gift of the conqueror, and subject only to limitations which he may think right to impose upon it in the hands of the recipient.

If it should happen that property conceded or compensation granted to the conquered Sovereign should, by the terms of the concession or grant, be subjected in his hands to the limitations or entails to which the property given up, or in lieu of which compensation is made, was subject before the conquest, it does not appear, from the papers before us, that Her Majesty had any interest in such property. It does not follow that the limitations or entails relating to such property would be the same as those relating to the Kingdom.

We think that, according to precedent, a formal protest against any injury which the annexation of Hanover by Prussia may inflict upon the reversionary interests of Her Majesty, or her descendants, should be formally made and tendered by Her Majesty's representative at Berlin to the King of Prussia, and we also think that a claim may be made on the ex-King of Hanover that property ceded, or compensation awarded to him, should be held subject to the limitation and entail to which Crown property was subject before the conquest.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 22nd of December last respecting the rights of Consulates in Hayti to afford an asylum to political refugees, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, with its inclosures, which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Hayti upon this subject; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the answers of the foreign Consuls to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Hayti, that the Government of that country has been in the habit of granting to the Consular-house the privilege of protecting refugees. This, as the American Consul justly observes, is an exceptional privilege not in accordance with the general law of nations.

The present Government of Hayti appear to desire the continuance of this privilege, because it spares the Government the necessity of inflicting capital punishment on political offenders, which they are obliged to decree, but do not wish to execute. Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires says that the exercise of the privilege has saved a great many lives, but "that it involves our Vice-Consuls not only in great expenses, but exposes them to serious disputes with the local authorities." He is of opinion, however, that, if it is to be abandoned, due notice should be given at a time when the Republic is tranquil of the intention to abandon it.

I think the existence of the privilege at this moment is made out; but I should also think that it ought, as soon as a proper time arrives, to be abandoned.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hayti, relative to the circumstances connected with the capture by the Haytian forces of the British vessel "Don José," in October last; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what instructions should be sent to Mr. St. John in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that, at the time when this schooner, the "Don José," was captured, the blockade of Cape Haitien was effectual "and completely closed the port."

The "Don José" has been tried properly, I presume; and though I do not find among the papers the copy of "the law under which the condemnation was effected," which Mr. St. John says he incloses, I see no reason to doubt that the vessel was properly condemned.

Her ignorance of the existence of the blockade appears very improbable; and it was a question for the Court to determine.

I see no reason for the official interference of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, either in this case or that of the "E. Beckwith."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 9.)

Doctors' Commons, January 9, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 22nd of May last on the subject of the liability of British subjects to serve in a force which was being organized in Mexico for the protection of property from the depredations of guerrilla bands, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico, inclosing a correspondence which he had held with the Mexican Government and with British residents on this subject, and requesting to be instructed as to the course he should pursue in the event of the Mexican Government insisting on the enrolment of foreigners in such bodies, notwithstanding the representation which has been made to them: and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Scarlett's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to him thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I adhere to the opinion which I had the honour to express in my former Report on this subject. The real question is, whether this body in which the foreigner is required to enrol himself, be bonâ fide intended exclusively for the strictly civil and municipal purposes of protecting property from depredation, or, whether it be for the further object also, of acting indirectly as part of an army against a military force, though that force may be organized by rebels. In the former case it is not unreasonable or contrary to international comity, regard being had to the present disturbed state of Mexico, that they should be required, as temporary citizens, to belong to that civil force. In the latter case it would be a violation of that comity to compel them to serve in this body or force. Moreover, in this instance, Mr. Scarlett observes, that Her Majesty's subjects are protected by an express Article of the Treaty between England and Mexico from compulsory military service.

I think that the payment of the tax proposed for a short or definite period would, as I have before said, be a fair adjustment of the difficulty. I agree with Mr. Scarlett that the acceptance of "honorary distinctions" cannot be forced upon Her Majesty's subjects, but I am not sure that I fully understand what is meant to be conveyed by these expressions.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's command signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to forward to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 196, December 9, 1865), reporting that application had been made to him to procure for the Emperor of Mexico a copy of the British Constitution; and to request that I would favour your Lordship with a list of Books of Reference which might be furnished for His Majesty's use.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That copies of the Petition of Right (3 Car. I, cap. 1), the Act against the Star Chamber, &c. (16 Car. I, cap. 10), the Habeas Corpus Acts (31 Car. II, cap. 2, and 56 Geo. the High Commission Court (16 Car. I, cap. 11), may, in my opinion, usefully be sent to Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico, as containing some of the most important guarantees for the general constitutional system of this country which have ever been introduced, or placed on record by direct legislation.

The only Books of Reference which it occurs to me to mention are the once popular but rather superficial and rhetorical Treatise of Delolme, and Hallam's "Constitutional History of England," which latter is, in my judgment, by far the best work on this subject.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin, relative to a claim of the heirs of the late Dr. Gibson on the property of the firm of Lamadrid, of Acapulco; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That in the circumstances of this case I think that further communication should be had by Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico before the realisation of this mortgage be pressed upon the firm of Lamadrid through the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

It is clear from the letter of Mr. Wylie that this pressure would result in the loss of the property. I therefore advise that Messrs. Gibson be answered to the effect that Her Majesty's Government decline, while the persons entitled in distribution are not unanimous, to give directions to Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico to press for the foreclosure of this mortgage, being assured by him that the result will be, in the present state of Mexican affairs, to cause the loss of the property; but that Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico will be requested to specify a reasonable period, after the expiration of which he thinks the foreclosure of the mortgage may be attempted.

In the meanwhile it is, of course, competent to Messrs. Gibson to take what steps they think expedient on their own behalf in this matter.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that, with reference to my Reports of the 22nd May and the 20th June, 1865, and the 9th January of the present year, respecting the obligation sought to be imposed upon British subjects in Mexico to serve in the Rural Guard, he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that your Lordship has recently instructed Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico to propose to the Mexican Government the draft of a new Treaty of Commerce and Navigation to be substituted for the existing Treaty of the 26th December, 1826. That in that draft is inserted an Article exempting British subjects from compulsory military service, and from any contributions imposed in lieu of such service; and that Mr. Scarlett, in a despatch also transmitted, expresses his apprehension lest the provisions of that Article should be at variance with the instructions which were addressed to him by Earl Russell and your Lordship, founded upon my Reports, to which reference is made.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit, by direction of your Lordship, a Memorandum upon the subject which has been prepared in the Foreign Office, together with the draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Scarlett; and he was pleased to request that I would take such draft into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon. That your Lordship would be glad to receive my Report in time to write to Mr. Scarlett by the mail of the 1st May.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think that the instructions contained in your Lordship's letter to Mr. Scarlett are very proper. The addition proposed to Article XVI of the Treaty would remove all difficulty in the future construction of this Article, and perhaps it might be expedient that it should be made in the first instance, and before it is required by the Mexican Government; but I submit this suggestion to your Lordship's better judgment.

No. 119 E.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1866.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that, with reference to our report of the 30th of October last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 29), forwarding copies of a correspondence which has passed between himself and Mr. Crowther, in regard to the claim of the latter for protection, on the ground of his being a British subject, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. Mr. Hammond was pleased also to inclose, for our convenience, the former papers connected with this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the statement in the letter of Mr. Crowther to Mr. Scarlett (26th February, 1866), Mr. Crowther is the son of a British soldier, who served in the British Army in 1809-12. If this fact be capable of proof, we think his statement that he is himself a natural born British subject may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken for true; and if he now seeks to be recognized as a British subject generally, and without reference to any circumstances connected with or arising out of the late civil war in America, we think that he might be fairly recognized as a British subject by Mr. Scarlett.

If the records of the War Office support his statement that his father did serve in the British Army, any other proof of that statement will probably be unnecessary; if not it cannot be accepted as true, without proof. In the meantime, as the circumstances of the case appear to render it probable that he was originally a British subject, we think that Mr. Scarlett should continue to extend to him a protection, limited to six months, or some such period, before the expiration of which Mr. Crowther must produce some reasonable evidence of his British origin, unless, on reference to the War Office records, such evidence should prove to be unnecessary.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 83) relative to the proceedings of the Government of that country in taking possession of a line of railway in which British interests are concerned, and to request that I would take the same into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Scarlett.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this act of the Mexican Government appears to be extremely arbitrary and unjustifiable, and I humbly advise that Mr. Scarlett be instructed to use his good offices on behalf of Mr. Davidson, as a foreign shareholder in the railway of which the Government has thus summarily possessed itself; at the same time Mr. Scarlett should apprize Mr. Davidson that he must rely principally upon his own exertions, both by putting in force whatever remedies the law may furnish and by addressing memorials to the Emperor and his Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Decree in question prohibits all commerce between places subject to the Imperial Government and the Department of Chihuahua, which is under the control of the enemy of the Emperor, and it also contains a Regulation with respect to passports as to persons travelling in that Department; that it is to be remembered that Her Majesty, though neutral in the civil war now existing in Mexico, has recognized the Emperor as the lawful Sovereign of that State. No question, it will be observed, as to the validity of any blockade is raised by this Decree. I see no reason to doubt the competence of the Emperor of Mexico to make the Decree in question, which is to have effect only within his own dominions.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres, giving a summary of the occurrences connected with the imprisonment of Mr. George D. Stewart of that city, whose case has for some time been before Her Majesty's Government, and has already been reported on by Her Majesty's Advocate-General.

Mr. Hammond was at the same time to transmit to us the former correspondence on the subject, and to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the merits of Mr. Stewart's case as set forth therein, and as to the nature of any further instructions to be addressed to Mr. Ford on the subject, and of any communication to be made to the party in this country who has applied in behalf of Mr. Stewart.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres has taken every step which was proper and judicious in this matter, and that it is not necessary to address to him any further instructions upon the subject of Mr. Stewart's claim. Upon the merits of that claim we have not as yet sufficient evidence before us to pronounce an opinion with certainty; but there seems to be at present no proof that the tribunal before which it is now pending will not do justice with respect to it. The proper answer to the gentleman applying in this country on behalf of Mr. Stewart would be, that Her Majesty's Government have instructed Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to give such aid to Mr. Stewart as he may be properly able to give; but that as the case of this gentleman is now depending before the ordinary tribunals of the country, there is no ground for any other kind of official interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th of March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 13th ultimo, from Messrs. Geach and Franklyn, putting forward the claim of Mr. Finkenstein, as a naturalized British subject, to receive from the Russian Government compensation on account of injuries inflicted on him by Russian soldiers in 1863, under the circumstance set forth in the previous papers in this case, also sent therewith;[*] and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Geach and Franklyn.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by Earl Russell in his letter to Mr. Finkenstein of April 30, 1863. Mr. Finkenstein being a Russian subject by birth and allegiance, received his injuries in the country of which he was a subject, from soldiers who were his fellow-subjects.

The British naturalization (even if it had been general, and not, as we infer, merely colonial) could not, without the consent of Russia, give Mr. Finkenstein the character of a British subject in the Empire of Russia.

The Queen's Advocate to Lord Stanley.—(Received August 2.)

Doctors' Commons, August 2, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, which has been received through the Colonial Office,* relative to the seizure of the British vessel "President" for an alleged breach of the revenue laws of the Republic of St. Domingo; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to any steps to be taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that all the vessels seized for alleged breach of the revenue laws of Puerto Plata have been restored to their owners. It is very difficult to understand what de facto authority governs at this part of the Island of San Domingo; but looking to the circumstances, I do not think any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government necessary on behalf of the owners of these vessels.

It would seem to be very desirable that there should be a resident Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata.

Doctors' Commons, December 15, 1866.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Board of Trade on the subject of certain expenses incurred by the British Vice-Consul at San Domingo in 1864 for the provisioning of the crew of the British vessel "Eliza," which had been seized by the Spanish authorities for an alleged attempt to break the blockade then in force at San Domingo; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship of the steps which it will now be proper to take thereon. The previous correspondence was also inclosed.

---

* Colonial Office, July 16 and July 25, 1866.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the papers that it was at first doubtful whether the "Eliza" was seized by the Spanish authorities on the ground of her having violated some municipal law, or her having broken the blockade of San Domingo; but her detention was finally justified by the Spanish authorities on the latter ground. It appears also that she was, after long detention (eighty-one days), ultimately released without trial; and if the statement in the Judgment of the Court of the Turks and the Caicos Islands be correct, the vessel was repaired by the Spanish authorities and restored to her owners.

That the "Eliza" was taken in a blockaded port appears to be admitted, her defence being that she was driven there by stress of weather. As this is a very common pretext of blockade-runners, her detention and examination were not improper, much less illegal; and if she had been fairly tried, and the Court had determined that, though she was innocent, there had been in the circumstances probable cause of seizure, and that therefore her owners were not entitled to costs or damages, a regard for our own prize precedents would have perhaps warranted Her Majesty's Government in abstaining from making any official complaint of the decision.

It appears, however, that her seizure having been almost immediately protested against by the proper British authorities, and due information given that compensation would be insisted upon, eighty-one days elapsed before her release was granted, and then without any trial, so that her owner had no opportunity of preferring to the Prize Court his demand for costs and damages. In this state of things Her Majesty's Government were advised that the presumption must be that the "Eliza" was in no way to blame, and therefore, as a matter of right, entitled to that compensation which is usually expressed in the Prize Court under the terms "costs and damages," the latter including all fair expenses of a demurrage character. Accordingly, Her Majesty's Government made a demand to this effect, including the sum of 68*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, to which the letter of the Board of Trade (1st December, 1866) refers; but I cannot discover that this demand, conveyed in two letters of Mr. West, 11th and 13th July, 1865 (copies of which were inclosed to the Foreign Office, 15th July, 1865), has received any answer. This is at least the last despatch on the subject previously to the letter of the Board of Trade above referred to, which I can find in the papers now submitted to me.

The application which that letter requests your Lordship to make to the Spanish Government has been made a year and a half ago; and unless some intervening arrangement has been made, or different resolution on the part of Her Majesty's Government (of which I am not aware) has been taken, it seems to me that the only course which your Lordship can now pursue is to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid to press for an immediate satisfaction of this long-delayed claim, and that when the money be obtained the sum of 68*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* should be sent to the Board of Trade for the repayment of Her Majesty's Vice-Consul's expenses at San Domingo incurred by supporting the crew of the "Eliza."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—If the vessel has been repaired by the Spanish Government, the costs of the repairs (unless, indeed, caused by the act of the Spanish Government) will probably be deducted from the amount of compensation which has been claimed.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Stanley.—(Received November 26.)

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Dresden, in which he requests to be informed as to the legal status in this country and abroad of persons who are born in a foreign country, of a mother being a natural-born British subject; and to request that we would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply to be given to Mr. Eden's inquiries.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the child born abroad of a foreign father, and of a mother being a natural-born British subject, is not entitled to the privileges of a natural-born British subject, but remains an alien, notwithstanding the statute 7 & 8 Vict., cap. 66, by which such a child is enabled to inherit land; nor is the child having this status entitled to the protection, as a natural-born British subject, of Her Majesty's Agents abroad, or to a British passport, or to the privilege of being married at one of Her Majesty's Legations.

But we think that the protection of Her Majesty's Representatives abroad, might fairly be extended to the child in any country other than that of her father, in any case of distress or particular emergency.

Lincoln's Inn, January 24, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th January instant, stating that, with reference to our previous reports on the subject of vessels supposed to be fitting out in this country to act as privateers in the war between Spain and Chile, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us further letters from the Treasury and the Home Department* relative to vessels which are being fitted out at Liverpool and elsewhere, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to whether any steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not find any facts stated in these papers, upon which we can advise Her Majesty's Government that they ought to take any steps with respect to the vessels which are mentioned in them.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received March 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 28, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, with reference to our Report of the 1st of August last, two letters from the Colonial Office,† inclosing further despatches from the Governor of the Bahamas relative to Mr. Wiggins, the lessee of Cay Sal. The previous correspondence which has taken place on this subject was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the course suggested by Mr. Cardwell can properly be taken in this matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, transmitting a letter and its inclosures which has been received from the Colonial Office, containing further information respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That at present there does not appear to us to be sufficient evidence to show whether Mr. Wiggins, or the person passing by that name, is, or is not, a slaver or wrecker, or both. If he is, it certainly seems strange that he should have asked to have revenue officers stationed on the island.* Should these suspicions turn out to be well founded, it would, of course, be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to take all lawful measures for preventing instead of forwarding his claim to be lessee of the island; but these measures should, in our opinion, be taken directly by Her Majesty's Government, and not indirectly with Spain, having regard to the acts of Governor Bayley, and the formal transfer of the lease from Mr. Wilson to this person.

Upon the whole we advise that for the present the proceedings of this person be carefully watched, and further evidence must be collected before Her Majesty's Government take any definite steps in this matter.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 27, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th April instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 13th of September last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 70, March 17), inclosing a copy and translation of a note which he has received from the Spanish Government, in which they decline to give any compensation to the owners of the "Mermaid," or to accede to the proposal of Her Majesty's Government that this case, as well as those of other vessels which were sunk by shots from the fort of Ceuta, should be submitted to a Mixed Commission, to arbitration, or to the good offices of a friendly Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose the previous documents connected with the case of the "Mermaid," together with the papers connected with the cases alluded to by the Spanish Government; and to request that we would take all these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the reasons assigned by the Spanish Minister for non-compliance with either of the alternatives proposed by Sir J. Crampton do not appear to us satisfactory. So far as the question of the interest of the witnesses is concerned, the Spanish officers appear to us to be open to, at least, as much objection as the captain and crew of the "Mermaid."

With respect to the case cited, in which the British Government is alleged to have refused compensation to the Spanish Government, we have only to observe that, as far as we can judge, it appears to be distinguishable from that of the "Mermaid," and also that no offer of arbitration appears to have been pressed by the Spanish Government in that case upon the Government of Her Majesty.

Upon the whole, we adhere to the opinion expressed in the Report which we have had the honour to make upon this subject.

No. 195A.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received July 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 4, 1866.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our joint consideration, the accompanying papers,* which, with the exception of Sir J. Crampton's despatch No. 133, which has just been received, have at various times been submitted to the Queen's Advocate, respecting the case of the British vessel "Mermaid," sunk by a shot fired at her from a Spanish battery at Tarifa; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should now pursue.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter the opinion which we have had the honour, after a careful examination of the evidence submitted to us, to express to your Lordship in our joint Reports of the 13th September, 1865, and of the 27th of April of the present year, upon this case. The refusal of Señor de Castro to grant compensation in this case is founded upon two reasons:—

One, that the Spanish Government gives, and has a right to give, more credence to the declarations of the Spanish officers (whom he declares, strangely enough, to be wholly disinterested, though they are justifying their own acts, which, if admitted to be unjustifiable, might entail on them a heavy responsibility) than to the declarations of the captain and crew of the "Mermaid;" but the obvious answer is, that the credence due to the deponents on either side must depend upon a proper investigation of all the circumstances and probabilities of the case as compared with the statements on each side: for it is not mere swearing or declaring, but swearing or declaring credibly, which ought to procure credence for the oath or declaration.

The proposition of Her Majesty's Government to submit this matter to proper arbitration would, if accepted by the Spanish Government, have led, and would still lead, to an investigation and decision, which would, of course, be acquiesced in as decisive by both Governments.

The other reason of Señor de Castro is, that Her Majesty's Government, in each of the cases of the "Rayo," in 1844, and of the "Prometheo" and "Iris," in 1854, believed the testimony of their own officers, and disbelieved that of the Spanish witnesses.

It is obvious, however, that the value of the testimony given in each particular case must depend upon the whole circumstances of that case; and Her Majesty's Government did not, in either of the instances referred to, profess to give credit to the testimony of British witnesses, because they were British, in preference to that of foreigners; but they rested their conclusions mainly upon the internal evidence of the whole transactions, and upon the application of tests beyond the region of serious controversy. The "Rayo" was a Spanish Government vessel, sunk by shots fired from Gibraltar (about which fact there was no difference), on account of her disregarding signals intended to bring her to, after a boat despatched from her had, within British waters, pursued and fired shots at a smack suspected of contraband trade. Not only was the fact of the chase and firing within British waters established by a great mass of British testimony, but there was really no opposing testimony, not even so much as a distinct denial on the part of the Spanish Commander; nor could the question itself very well have arisen if the "Rayo" and her boat had not followed the chase within gun-shot of Gibraltar. The signals given from the Rock, after the chase had been discontinued, may have been (and probably were) misunderstood by the Spanish officer; and the true character and the movements of the "Rayo" and her boat may have been, in some degree, mistaken by the British officers; her destruction, also, was unintentional, and was justly the subject of regret: but as the whole affair arose out of an unjustifiable violation of British territory (about which there was no room for serious controversy, and of which this was not the first instance), it was impossible for Her Majesty's Government to accept responsibility for the consequences.

In the more recent case of the "Prometheo" and "Iris," which was one of accidental collision at sea, the facts on which the British Government relied were proved by the log-book of the "Prometheo," and by the repairs which that vessel had actually required and undergone in consequence of the collision. The conclusion drawn as to the absence of fault, and consequent responsibility on the part of the British officer, was derived rather from the application of nautical judgment and science to the facts so established, with others not in controversy, than from any preference of British to Spanish testimony. Besides which there was a known legal remedy open in that case, in the British Court of Admiralty, to the Spanish owners of the "Iris," if they had been able to show that the collision really arose through the fault of the commander of the "Prometheo;" and where such a legal remedy existed, and was not resorted to, Her Majesty's Government could not be required to treat a case in which they did not themselves recognize the existence of a valid ground of complaint as one to be settled by international arbitration.

We must conclude by observing that we see no reason why Her Majesty's Government should abandon the position which they have taken up in this matter, inasmuch as the evidence appears to show that reparation is due from the Spanish Government for a great injury inflicted by the act of Spanish authorities upon a British vessel, which appears to us to be proved, by clear and credible testimony, to have complied with the requisites of the Spanish law, and not to have disregarded them, and to have been, after and notwithstanding such compliance (though doubtless through inadvertence), fired at with ball, and consequently sunk.

We have, &c.
